Lightning Kills Six Soldiers at Ft. Belvoir

Three Others Severely Hurt As Bolt Strikes After Ball Game

Six youthful soldier baseball players at Fort Belvoir, Va., who but a moment before had been receiving the plaudits of dozens of soldier spectators were killed instantly, and the onlookers narrowly escaped a similar fate when a bolt of lightning ripped through their midst at 4 p. m. yesterday.

The game had just been called as the storm threatened and the players and spectators alike had gathered into one group and were making their way to the barracks. Good-natured banter about the game and the players was tossed back and forth, when a blinding flash, followed by a swishing sound and a terrific clap of thunder, plunged from the skies, scattering bodies in every direction.

Quiet at Tragedy Scene

Except for officers' voices ordering "Call out the guard," and the rush of feet to Army ambulances, as nurses and surgeons clung to apparatus being driven by drivers trained for just such an emergency all was quiet. But as the rescuers neared the limp forms, they could hear the moans of some, while others were seared almost beyond recognition.

At first it was reported nine had died, but later it was found three who were severely hurt had a fair chance of recovery. After next of kin had been notified, Capt. Samuel Don Swan, public relations officer, announced the names of those who died. They were:

Philip W. Hiance of Cold Spring, Ky.

Russel R. Heller, Philadelphia.

James A. Hood, Augusta, Ga.

Chester Dearing, Richmond.

C. J. Caverly, Muskegon, Mich.

Julian D. Rosin, Chicago.

All were privates except Rosin, who was a private first class.

Some Still Living

The names of the three still living were not announced because relatives had not been informed of the tragedy up to a late hour last night.

Just previous to the game the men, reported to be officer candidates, and young (the army would not divulge their ages) were engaged in drill and instruction. Following the drill some one suggested baseball before supper. Others obtained the equipment and "Batter-up!"—rang out across the field. Then came the storm, and tragedy.

Capt. Swan said the men belonged to Company C Provisional Replacement Battalion. He said artificial respiration equipment was used immediately on the lightning victims but without success.

"The men," he said, "died in the service of our country just as surely as though they had died on some far flung front, and the Army will act accordingly."

Two of the bodies last night were placed in the B. Wheatley funeral home, 809 King st., Alexandria, Va. The others will be taken there today.

The Gallup Poll

Unified Air Command Favored By 59% of Informed Americans

By George Gallup
Director American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., Aug. 10.—With repeated demonstrations of the importance of air power in all theaters of the war, a renewed campaign is being launched to create a separate, unified command for all the American air forces under a chief of staff for air warfare.

The American people, long believers in aviation, have become even more air-minded in recent months through the influence of books, motion pictures, and newspaper articles dealing with air power in modern war.

A coast-to-coast survey indicates that some 17 million members of the adult voting population have followed the discussion of a separate air force and have formed a definite opinion about its advisability. Their opinion, the survey finds, is favorable to the program.

The vote was limited to those persons who were able to define what is meant by a separate air force and who have followed the discussions of the subject. This informed group was then asked:

"Would you approve or disapprove of a separate air force for the United States?"

The vote is:

Favor separate air force..59%
Opposed 41

Bills have been introduced in both houses of Congress to establish unified air command. The issue has been brought into the limelight by a campaign of The Washington Post to focus attention on the air-unification proposal.

3 Cafe Owners To Face Board Of Revocations

Habitual Violation Of Sanitary Code Will Be Charged

By Joseph Paull
Post Staff Writer

The names of three restaurant owners who, according to records, are habitual violators of the District sanitary code are to be submitted today to the Board of Revocation of Licenses, it was learned yesterday, as the drive to "clean up or close up" food establishments began to take tangible form.

Other developments were:

1. The Washington Restaurant Association announced intensification of an educational drive.

2. Attachments for appearance in Municipal Court of two restaurateurs who did not appear to answer charges of insanitation yesterday were ordered.

3. Four more restaurant owners face possible action by the revocation board in the next few days.

4. Six grocers forfeited $25 in Municipal Court.

Suspension Urged

Daniel L. Seckinger, acting District health officer said that in submitting the names and records of the restaurant owners, he was suggesting immediate action on the matter of suspension of licenses.

The following names and records were given:

Louis Goodman, 935 Pennsylvania ave. nw.; forfeited $25 on May 25, $50 on July 14; fined $250 on August 4 for having 175 pounds of decomposed meat.

Louis Mandes, 214 9th st. nw.; forfeited $25 on October 24, February 9, April 10, April 20, May 26 and July 19.

Charles E. Sanford, 62-64 H st. ne.; forfeited $25 on April 07, July 25 and August 28, 1942, and April 4 and May 12, 1943.

3-Point Program

In an effort to clear up the situation and to give representation to the restaurant owners before the Health Department, members of the industry have been discussing ways and means of improving the situation. A Washington Restaurant Association committee of Al G. Earnest of Ewarts Cafeteria, Dr. Julian Pollard of People's Drug Stores, Mrs. Ada Pabst of the Blue and Gray Cafeteria; J. W. Marriott of the Hot Shoppes, and Robert Wilson, executive secretary of the association, yesterday discussed the

Defense Staff Sadly Lacking In Raid Test

'More Than Half' Of Command Center Personnel Missing

By John Singerhoff
Post Staff Writer

Washington had its first daylight air raid alert without previous warning 54 minutes before noon yesterday and "more than half" of the personnel of the District Command Center failed to mobilize.

Not only did the volunteer operators of the command post fail to show up, but also missing were the chiefs of the PUC, Medical Service and the coordinator of the command himself.

John Russell Young, regional OCD director, who checked in at the center before the red signal died out, was the first to criticize the service heads and their subordinates and declared he was "greatly disappointed" by the laxity.

"I don't know how the citizens reacted," asserted Young, "because I was inside practically throughout the alert. The chiefs of defense service and the individuals assigned to operate the Command Center, however, failed to show up. I don't know why."

Preliminary signal of the surprise test ((Washington yellow) came at 11:06 a. m. Ten minutes later sirens blasted the blue signal, the first warning to civilians of the test alert.

Signals Hardly Discernible

Majority of persons on the streets paid little attention to the warning blast. It was near noontime and those who gave it any thought at all apparently thought the signals were short circuited.

However, when the red signal (the wavering alarm sounds) came at 11:25 a. m. there were few who were not on their toes. Downtown F and G sts. were virtually free of pedestrian traffic before the red signals ceased to sound. Automobile traffic was shunted to the curb by police and volunteer workers.

Outlying sections, according to reports, were not as quick responding. Some said the signals were hardly discernible within houses.

Civilian defense groups—auxiliary police and firemen—were practically nonexistent outside of the downtown area, officials reported. This fault was blamed on the fact that the majority of neighborhood auxiliaries are employed downtown.

The red signal—that signifying that bombs are bing dropped—remained in effect only 10 minutes

But Child Is Home Now

Woman Walked Unquestioned Into Hospital and Stole Baby

Albany, Oreg., Aug. 10 (AP).—Mrs. Catherine Wright told authorities tonight she walked unquestioned into a hospital a week ago last night, took the first baby she came to in the nursery and walked out again.

That baby was Judith Gurney, then only two days old.

Mrs. Wright was arrested last night just as she and her husband, Sergt. Jesse Wright, were leaving for Portland with the baby. Little Judith was in good health and apparently had been well cared for.

Mrs. Wright, who at first contended the baby was her own, dictated a full story of the abduction in the presence of District Attorney Harlow Weinrick. This was her story:

Believing herself an expectant mother, Mrs. Wright had made long preparations for a baby.

"But I found out Monday night that I was not going to have a baby," she said.

Without a specific plan then, she walked eight blocks to the hospital, entered through the main door and went directly to the nursery on the second floor. She was not halted or questioned by anyone.

She picked up the baby in the nearest crib, carried the baby down the back stairs, walked calmly out through the main entrance, and returned to the home where she was living with another couple. Her husband was on duty at nearby Camp

98-Degree Heat Scores Year's High

21,000 Federal Employes Sent Home; Cooler Today, No Rain

Water for Gardens

PERMISSION is granted for the use of 1,200,000 gallons of filtered water for victory gardens. No relief in sight for drought-stricken areas, forecast says (B-1.)

Four Overcome

The temperature hit a new high for the year yesterday when, at 3:10 p. m., it registered 98, causing four heat prostrations and sending 21,000 Federal workers home.

It will not be so hot today, the Weather Bureau predicted, but no rain is in sight for at least another 24 hours. The war forbids the bureau to make forecasts for longer than 26 hours.

It was 99 on July 19, 1942, the highest for that year. But the highest recording was made on July 20, 1930, when for the third time in Washington, 106 was registered.

Marie Boggs, 33, 334 36th st. ne., was taken ill while sitting in the living room of her home. She collapsed and was unconscious when the family physician arrived. She responded to treatment and remained at home.

Charles F. West, Negro, 74, 320 U st. nw., was found unconscious in an alley in the rear of the 500 block of Randolph st. nw. He was treated at Freedmen's Hospital and released.

Frank Moore, Negro, 38, of 447 Browns Court sw., was stricken ill at 11:50 a. m. and was treated at Freedmen's Hospital. He was later sent home. Eral Davis, Negro, 19, of 602 21st st. nw., was stricken near his home at 1 p. m. and was treated at Georgetown Hospital.

Record Made for Year

Beginning with 78 at 6:20 a. m. yesterday, and following an early tantalizing rain, the temperature continued to rise with the bright sun until at noon it registered 88. One hour later, while thousands were at luncheon, it had reached 93 at 1 p. m. It remained at 93 through 2 p. m., but one hour later, at 3 p. m., it stood at 97. In the next ten minutes it reached 98, highest for the day and year. At 4:30 it was 89 and at 5 p. m., 81, a drop of eight degrees in 30 minutes. It went up to 82 at 5 and remained there through 6:30 p. m.

Officials of the Public Buildings Administration said the temperature in nonair-conditioned buildings had reached 95. Workers were ordered to leave at 3:30 to 4 p. m. from the Selective Service Building, the old Postoffice Building, Hutchins Building, Riverside Apartments Building, Civil Service Building, Walker Building and many others.

Mile After Mile

By Relman Morin
Associated Press Staff Writer

Allied Headquarters in North Africa, Aug. 10.—Allied forces, smashing the center of the German line northwest of Mount Etna, drove today to within 10 road miles—and probably 7 miles—of battered Randazzo, one of the last of the enemy's hedge-hog defenses on the road to Messina from central Sicily.

(A Reuters report said the Americans, advancing from Cesaro, were only 2 miles from Randazzo.)

As the Sicilian campaign entered its second month, American, Canadian and British troops were officially reported to be making relentless though unspectacular progress in forcing the fiercely resisting Germans back into the Sicilian funnel of Messina.

The Germans were dynamiting mountainsides to cover miles of roads as they fell back.

Randazzo in Flames

It was reported that the Rome radio announced that all Italian troops had been withdrawn from the Sicilian front because of the overwhelming superiority of Allied forces. The radio asserted that "if the Americans pay a proportionate price for Italy as they have paid for Sicily, they will be in a state of utter exhaustion at the end of the war."

Randazzo was still ablaze from ceaseless air raids, some of which continued without a break throughout entire days. The full power of the Allied air forces, which officially are declared to hold "absolute air supremacy" over Sicily and southern Italy, has torn against this highway key point.

Through damage done to roads, the city has been almost eliminated as a communications junction, but powerful German defenses erected there are considered still capable of presenting strong resistance to attacking infantry.

It has been disclosed that General Schatel heads the German Fourteenth Corps, composed of something over three divisions, which has been engaged in Sicily.

Warships Rake Shore Roads

Apparently the enemy has made up his mind to spend his bolt, for after days of careful husbanding of supplies he is expending huge quantities of dynamite in blowing down the mountainsides, snuffing out miles of twisting roads with avalanches and forcing the Allied soldiers to drag their guns and heavy equipment along long and painful de tours to catch up with the back-pedaling foe.

This is slowing up, but not stopping the Allied rush toward Italy.

RAF Batters Reich Again In Great Wave

Channel Residents See Vast Air Fleet Head for Rhineland

By Gladwin Hill
Associated Press Staff Writer

London (Wednesday), Aug. 11.—The RAF, sweeping across the Channel in waves that coastal observers said indicated a raid in great force, battered Germany last night for the second successive night, the British announced today.

From the roar of the engines of the heavy bombers it sounded like one of the biggest forces to leave England in some time.

With thundering attacks on the Ruhr and Rhineland Monday night, Britain had served notice that the bombing lull was over even while the Nazis continued their anxious evacuation of unessential civilians from Berlin.

RAF heavy bombers in such numbers that Channel coast residents who saw them heading eastward just before midnight said the moonlit sky "seemed full of them" droned back to the big twin Rhineland industrial cities of Mannheim and Ludwigshafen and bombed them for the 57th time, after a four months' respite. They returned with the remarkable low loss of nine planes while the German news agency DNB reported "considerable damage" with heavy casualties.

RAF Mosquitoes bombed the Ruhr while Intruders over France and Belgium punched away at the Nazi fighter force airdromes and railroads.

Although the Germans were patently apprehensive of an imminent "Hamburging" of Berlin, airmen expressed opinion this compaign probably would be some time in

Russians Advance On 300-Mile Front; 70 Villages Taken

By Edward D. Ball
Associated Press Staff Writer

London (Wednesday), Aug. 11.—The Red Army battered its way into the northeast Ukraine Tuesday to within 14 miles of Sumy, tightened its flanking grip around Kharkov, where Russian forces were barely 12 miles from the city, and smashed into a railway town 45 miles east of Bryansk, Moscow announced today.

The Russians made general advances along the entire 300-mile active front. Seventy towns and villages were taken in the Kharkov advance, and 30 in the Bryansk drive, rolling up the main rail line from Orel.

Night Attack on Sumy

One Soviet column, striking west toward Sumy, made a significant penetration to 14 miles southeast of the town.

The attack toward Sumy was made at night when a Soviet unit struck to capture Bolshoi Bobrik and Boromlya. They killed about 1500 Germans and seized much booty.

Sumy is 190 miles due east of Kiev and the Dnieper River, which is the last important German defense line in South Russia. It is about 75 miles west of a line through Kharkov and may be the hub for a Russian pivot to the southwest. The Germans, falling back from Kharkov, were expected to retire to the winding river which bends around to the southeast in this area.

Donets River Crossed

Northwest and west of Kharkov the Red troops were "grinding down enemy reserves which have been brought up," said the Moscow midnight communique, recorded here by the Soviet monitor.

North and northeast of Kharkov a Russian formation dashed 8 miles to seize the district center of Lipisi, 12 miles northeast of the industrial center. In another sector Red army men crossed the Donets River, and after fierce

British Chief In Quebec With Army, Naval Aides

President Reveals News to Reporters; Date and Place of Meeting Not Told

By Edward T. Folliard
Post Staff Writer

Prime Minister Winston Churchill has arrived in Canada, and he and President Roosevelt will meet shortly for another momentous war conference—the time and place of which must remain a secret.

President Roosevelt himself gave out the news yesterday at his press-radio conference.

Almost immediately thereafter it was announced in Canada that the British leader had arrived in Quebec, along with his military and naval advisers. How he made the trip, whether by ship or plane, was not disclosed.

Churchill was stopping at The Citadel, an old French fort located on Quebec's highest hill. With him was Mrs. Churchill and their daughter, Subaltern Mary Churchill, of the Auxiliary Territorial Service. Also in the Prime Minister's entourage was Wing Commander G. P. Gibson, who led the squadron RAF planes which torpedoed the Moehne and Eder dams and caused vast damage in Germany's industrial area.

The forthcoming conference between Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Churchill, like the five others that have preceded it, will be an American-British affair.

Russia Question Mark

President Roosevelt was asked yesterday whether Soviet Russia would participate. He said he did not think so. But, he quickly added, this didn't mean that we wouldn't be awfully glad to see the Russians.

This meeting of the President and the Prime Minister comes at a time when the Allies have the Axis on the run all over the globe. Mussolini's fall, as the President said recently, has brought the first "crack" in the Axis. Sicily is being rapidly overrun, the Anglo-American bomber team is pounding Germany as never before, the Russians are sweeping ahead in their first summer offensive, and the Japanese have definitely lost the initiative in the Pacific.

Nothing But Phone Call

London was predicting last night that the Roosevelt-Churchill meeting foreshadowed more hard news for the Axis—possibly an invasion of the European mainland to take advantage of the Russian offensive.

President Roosevelt was almost casual in giving out the news of the imminent council of war. He said at the beginning that he had

Yanks Advance Within 2 Miles Of Bairoko Base

Allied Headquarters in the Southwest Pacific (Wednesday), Aug. 11 (AP).—United States jungle troops have advanced within 2 miles of Bairoko Harbor, the last Japanese holding on New Georgia Island, Gen. Douglas MacArthur announced today.

Over Rendova Island, which is 8 miles below Munda, 50 Japanese planes put in an appearance, and two were shot down.

At the other end of the 750-mile battlefront, where Americans and Australians have as their objective, the enemy air base of Salamaua, New Guinea, that point was attacked with 85 tons of bombs by Allied planes.

The communique also disclosed that August 9, 142 tons of bombs were dropped on Salamaua in an assault in which large dumps and installations were destroyed. In the northern Solomons near Buka, a Japanese cargo ship was bombed and damaged.

WPB Looks Ahead

Nelson Surveying Industry Against Abrupt Ending of War

(Brigadier General Johnson, chairman of Smaller War Plants Corporation, resigns from Army to fight for more civilian production. Page 9.)

By Edwin D. Gritz
Copyright, 1943, by The Washington Post.

Is anything specific being done now to prevent industrial dislocation should war end suddenly this year or next year or any year?

This question is being asked with increasing frequency throughout the country. It is said to be hurting war production, because the psychological reaction is leading some people to seek their own business salvation even now.

An authoritative discussion of the subject established for the first time yesterday that the War Production Board intends to have a comprehensive program for orderly industrial demobilization by fall to meet any military contingency.

Except for this future development and assurance, it was admitted that the amount of basic, concrete thinking done so far on the subject "could be put into your eye."

This is not to say, however, that there has not been a great deal of general planning. But this, it was pointed out, is "stratospheric thinking" which will not get industry out of war production and into peace production when the time comes for such action.

Up to now, Donald M. Nelson, War Production Board chairman, has declined to indicate that there is any other business in hand except war production. From here on in, Nelson was said to be planning a gradual shift in WPB policy to give demobilization the attention it requires in terms of war developments.

This shift, it was learned, is not only due to the increasing eloquence of assurance-seeking industrialists, but also results from criticism within WPB that the agency is directed entirely by "production" men who disregard everything but production, despite new military developments.

Nelson, obviously mindful of criticism that even the State Department (and thereby the Office of War Information was "caught short" when Mussolini suddenly departed, is said to be going ahead with plans for industrial demobilization even though WPB has not re-

U.S., British About to Recognize French Body, Algiers Reports

By Daniel De Luce
Associated Press Staff Writer

Algiers, Aug. 10.—The United States and Britain were reported tonight to have agreed to recognize the French Committee of National Liberation as the de facto government and trustee of French interests overseas until Gen. Henri Giraud's armies land in France.

The report circulated in authoritative quarters in Algiers, which has become the temporary capital of the French Empire.

It was believed that a joint Anglo-American statement on French recognition might be one outcome of the forthcoming meeting of President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill.

Allied officials here have indicated that the French unity achieved by the Committee of National Liberation is such as to afford a firm basis for the empire's government and war effort pending the Allied invasion of continental France.

Some sources expressed belief that a "limitation clause" would be contained in the statement of recognition confining it to the period preceding the actual landing of French armed forces on French soil.

If a "limitation clause" of this nature is included, it could result in an embarrassing interim between the time the de facto status of the liberation committee ceased to exist and the time the French ish heavy and light naval units continue to rake the enemys' exposed shore roads and anchor points with shellfire.

In the central sector, British and American patrols effected a junction in the mountains of the Cesaro-Bronte area, possibly trapping a sizable force of Germans fighting a bitter rearguard action to protect Randazzo, the valley hub north of Mount Etna.

The British, striking northeast from Bronte, were last reported within 7 miles of Randazzo, and the Americans pushing east from Cesaro were within 10 miles.

Possession of Randazzo would permit the Allies to strike either east toward Taormina on the coast, or north toward Capes Orlando, Calava or Milazzo.

But the Germans were lodged behind rocks in the hills. Fighting doggedly, they withdrew only to the next peak when routed by the bayonet or mortar and artillery fire. The British and Americans then were compelled to drag or carry their equipment over almost impassable terrain and demolished roads and repeat the process.

Seaborne Thurst Traps 1500

American infantrymen who splashed ashore to the rear of the Germans Sunday night at Torrenova captured 1500 Germans, it was announced, and the main body of the American Seventh Army of Lieut. Gen. George S. Patton, jr., has now contacted the raiding force.

Besides wrecking enemy installations, the maneuver forced the quick fall of San Fratello and San Agata, north coastal points, where the Germans had counted upon anchoring a new line of defense.

(The International Information Bureau, German propaganda agency, said in a broadcast that a second American landing operation on the north Sicilian coast had been "nipped in the bud." There was no Allied confirmation of the report.)

Wrapping its columns about Mount Etna, the British Eighth Army pushed ahead both along the coastal shelf toward Riposto and along the road circling the volcano to the west.

Pedara, a village on the slopes of Mount Etna, was the only place mentioned in the forward movements, and it was taken by the British.

Aiding the coastal column, British warships bombarded both Taormina and the railway station of Riposto, 9 miles to the south. Riposto is a little more than 34 airline miles from Messina.

Allied airmen sighted just 15 enemy aircraft in operations yesterday over Sicily, Sardinia and southern Italy. They shot down four and lost three planes in the battles.

"Forts" in Lead

Flying Fortresses took the lead in the aerial onslaught, slamming 500-pound and blockbuster bombs into the roads and crossings funneling into Messina.

Lighter bombers and fighter-bombers tied traffic up in knots at several vital crossroads, knocking out 16 vehicles at one place, and heaving up fresh wreckage on the ruins at Randazzo.

Wellingtons raided landing craft on the Messina beaches for the fifth straight night and at least six small ships were sunk off the north coast.

Across the strait in Italy, RAF Liberators and Halifaxes from the Middle East Command again knocked at San Giovanni; Mitchells damaged bridges and railway yards at Cantazaro, and Lightnings smashed radio installations, locomotives and small boats at Cape Spartivento, Galati, Roccela, Locri and Sidi Marino.

Report on U-Boat War Postponed

The Office of War Information said last night that a statement scheduled for yesterday on July antisubmarine operations had been temporarily postponed "by agreement of the President and Prime Minister Churchill."

The June statement reported that the number of Allied ship losses was extremely low, while submarine sinkings were declared to have averaged one a day for the month.

preparation so that when it came there would be no doubt of its effectiveness.

Meanwhile, there was a significant bit of official speculation on the durability of German morale. Dingle M. Foot, parliamentary secretary of the Ministry of Economic Warfare, told the Colchester Rotary Club that it "would not be surprising if the people in raided Germany were to say, as German industrial workers said in 1918, 'It is better to end with horror than horror without end.'"

Clouds obscured detailed reports of the bombing of Mannheim and Ludwigshafen, situated on opposite banks of the Rhine 43 miles southwest of Frankfort, but Canadian pilots who took part in the raid said they could see the fires 100 miles away.

Sergt. R. E. F. McNamara, rear gunner on a Canadian plane, declared he saw one particularly big explosion.

Pilot Officer Lindsay Vogan, who had visited Mannheim on previous occasions, said the opposition was much weaker than in previous attacks. Other veteran airmen also were surprised by the lack of opposition. Of the large force of Canadians taking part in the raid only two were reported missing.

nothing—nothing, that was, except a telephone call from Prime Minister Mackenzie King of Canada.

Mr. Mackenzie King had told him, the President said, that the Prime Minister of Great Britain had arrived in Canada, together with the members of his staff.

The President, enjoying greatly the stir he had caused, said he thought it could be assumed that he would meet the Prime Minister, and also that there would be Anglo-American staff meetings.

The President went on to say that he couldn't tell the reporters where the meeting would take place, or when, or anything like that.

"Mr. President," a reporter said, "we continue to hear talk of a second front in Europe. Isn't it a third front that remains to be opened rather than a second front?"

The President smiled and said the reporter talked like a columnist. He thus side-stepped a question that was raised anew last week by Pravavda, official newspaper of the Communist Party in Russia, which charged that America and Britain had failed Russia by refusing to invade Europe and divert 60 German divisions from the Russian front.

Another reporter asked Mr. Roosevelt if Russia would participate in his forthcoming conference with Churchill. This led the President to say that he didn't think so, but he would be awfully glad to have the Russians.

Once President Roosevelt had released the news, Prime Minister Mackenzie King in Canada gave out an official announcement which said:

"The Prime Minister of Great Britain has arrived in Canada accompanied by Lord Leathers, the Minister of War Transport for the United Kingdom, and the British chiefs of staff.

"Mr. Churchill was received on arrival by Mr. Mackenzie King and during his stay in Canada will be the guest of the Canadian Government.

"Mr. Churchill will have discussions with Mr. Mackenzie King and later on will attend a conference with President Roosevelt and the combined chiefs of staff of the United States and the United Kingdom."

Included in Churchill's personal staff were Lord Moran, president of the Royal College of Physicians; Gen. Sir Hastings Ismay, the Prime Minister's personal chief of staff; J. M. Martin, chief private secretary; T. L. Rowan, private secretary, and Comdr. C. R. Thompson, personal assistant.

Later on restrictions were lifted to permit announcement of names of some of Churchill's military advisers—those who usually have accompanied him to past international conferences.

They included Sir Alan Brooke, chief of the imperial general staff; Admiral of the Fleet Sir Dudley Pound, first sea lord; Chief Marshall Sir Charles Portal, chief of air staff, and Vice Admiral Lord Louis Mountbatten, chief of combined operations and leader of the famed commandos.

That something big was in the offing had been obvious at the White House ever since President Roosevelt got back from a fishing trip to Canada early Monday. He immediately went into a conference with Byron Price, Elmer Davis and Maj. Gen. Alexander Surles—men who would have the responsibility of handling news arrangements for a Roosevelt-Churchill conference.

Yesterday morning the President continued conferring with his lieutenants in the war effort.

He had as a luncheon guest Henry L. Stimson, his Secretary of War, who at the age of 75 has just finished a 13,500-mile flight to the European and African theaters of war.

Later in the day he conferred with the men who will represent the United States at the forthcoming council of war; Admiral William D. Leahy, the President's chief of staff; Gen. George C. Marshall, Army chief of staff; Admiral Ernest J. King, commander of the United States fleet, and Gen. Henry H. Arnold, chief of the Army air forces.

Postwar Planning

The President also conferred with Secretary of State Hull, Undersecretary Welles, Norman Davis, chairman of the American Red Cross; Dr. Isaiah Bowman, famous geographer, and Dr. Leo Pasvolsky, chief of the State Department's Division on Special Research and Postwar Problems.

Asked about his conference with these men, President Roosevelt told reporters that it was simply a continuation of postwar planning.

The President also was asked about reports from Madrid that Hitler had been supplanted by a military triumverate. He said he had no information on this beyond what he had seen in the newspapers, and neither had Secretary of State Hull up to 12:30 p. m.

A share-the-steel campaign, started last month, already has resulted in a gain of more than one million tons of steel for use on important construction programs the last half of this year, Chairman Donald M. Nelson of the War Production Board announced yesterday.

The figure represents half of the drive's overall quota of two million tons of additional steel for the third and fourth quarters.

Government Takes Seven Dried Fruits

Japs' Island Bases Hammered by Allies

By the Associated Press

Allied Headquarters in the Southwest Pacific (Wednesday), Aug. 11.—Allied bombers are reaching out north of the equator near the 1500-mile line of powerful Japanese island fortresses to seek out enemy shipping attempting to aid beleaguered garrisons in the Solomons and New Guinea.

This line extends east to west from Ponape through Truk, a main bastion, to Palau, covering the area directly north of the Solomons and New Guinea.

It was Truk that was mentioned in a New Guinea announcement Monday when the personnel of a B-24 Liberator heavy bomber was adjudged the "crew of the week" for making a 2500-mile round trip flight within 250 miles of the powerful naval stronghold.

Truk Crucial Base

Truk, in the Carolina group, lies about 1000 miles north of the present Pacific battle zone, and is in the center of the Japanese island chain that stretches as far east as the Marshall Islands and west to the Philippines.

The announcement disclosing the long flight to that area said the bomber was on armed reconnaissance of enemy shipping lanes. Truk is believed to be a main supply center for the Nipponese bases in the Solomons, where an American offensive has been under way since June 30.

Since that offensive started, there have been recurrent references in official communiques to reconnaissance flights to the north. These flights have aided in the destruction of at least 23 Japanese warships and many barges.

Attacks Continue

Since the capture of the Munda air base on New Guinea Island last week Allied bombers have been continuing the attack with heavy raids on other central Solomon bases. The Tuesday communique reported the dropping of 63 tons of bombs on the Vila airdrome on Kolombangara, just northwest of New Georgia.

Baipoko Harbor, 10 miles north of Munda, was hit with 22 tons of explosives. The only remaining force of Japanese on New Georgia is under siege there. The largest raid reported on Monday was a 103-ton attack against the Salamaua air base in New Guinea.

Ground fighting both in New Guinea and on New Georgia was slowed by heavy rains.

Halsey Spreads Credit

By the Associated Press

U. S. Headquarters in the South Pacific, Aug. 9 (Delayed).—The names of top admirals and generals responsible for planning and executing the victorious New Georgia campaign were released for the first time today by Admiral William F. Halsey's headquarters.

Plans for the New Georgia campaign were drawn by Halsey as South Pacific commander, in collaboration with his staff and Army men under him in this area, including Lieut. Gen. Millard F. Harmon, commanding Army forces in the South Pacific.

The plan of operations was then submitted to Gen. Douglas MacArthur, who had been designated overall commander for both South and Southwest Pacific areas.

When the plan was approved in Washington, Admiral Halsey was responsible for its execution in the South Pacific. In this case it involved the entire New Georgia campaign.

Halsey's spokesman announced that Vice Admiral Aubrey W. Fitch, Carmel, Calif., as Navy air commander in the South Pacific, was in overall command of air operations during the New Georgia campaign.

Rear Admiral Marc A. Mitscher, Coronado, Calif., commanding air forces in the Solomons, was tactical commander of all air forces until relieved by Maj. Gen. Nathan F. Twining, Portland, Oreg., former chief of the Thirteenth Air Force.

Rear Admirals R. K. Turner, Carmel, and T. S. Wilkinson, Arlington, Va., were in joint command of amphibious operations.

Rear Admiral George H. Fort commanded the flotillas of landing craft and Maj. Gen. Oscar W. Griswold was in command of Army forces ashore. Maj. Gen. John H. Hester, Albany, Ga., had charge of the early phases of the landing operations.

Badoglio Cabinet Member Quits as Nazis Hold Italy to Pact

By the Associated Press

London, Aug. 10.—The German radio indicated today the Germans still held Italy bound by the military pact Benito Mussolini signed and asserted Premier Marshal Pietro Bagdoglio was continuing talks with the Nazis.

The broadcast said, "There has in the last few days been no change in the German point of view with regard to a treaty of alliance."

Earlier messages from Madrid said the German persuasion of Badoglio to stay in the fight was backed by sufficient Nazi troops in the north of Italy to take over that industrial region.

The first resignation from Badoglio's government, meanwhile, was announced by the Rome radio which said Senator Umberto Ricci had replaced Bruno Fornaciari as Minister of the Interior. There was no indication whether this presaged a split in the Italian cabinet or was an isolated withdrawal after Fornaciari was unable to quiet the persistent cry of the population for peace.

"Fighting As Before"

The German radio quoted a German government spokesman as saying, "We are naturally in contact with the Italian government." The broadcast went on to say that such conversations were "not so uncommon between allies from time to time."

The spokesman was said to have pointed out that "the war, as proclaimed by the king and chief of state, was continuing also for Italy, that Italian troops were fighting as before and that the alliance was intact as could be seen daily from the Italian press."

The Berlin radio also reported that Italy, continuing her campaign to abolish all Fascist names and emblems, had changed the name of the 35,000-ton battleship Littorio to the Italia.

Rome Bombing Urged

The 1620-ton destroyer Camicia Nera (Blackshirt) also has been renamed the Artiglieri, said the broadcast.

The fascist littorio is a symbol stemming from old Roman times when the fasces—a bundle of rods tied around an axe—were carried by lictors as a sing of authority.

A demand that Rome be bombed again was sounded in the British press.

Urging a repetition of the July 19 bombing of Rome, the London Daily Express declared that "we should remind a million Italians in their capital that their need to force a decision from Badoglio is still more pressing than ours."

"To expect that Italy should desert Germany at this crucial moment of the war and trade her national honor as an escape from fighting is an insult," said the broadcast, which was recorded by the Ministry of Information.

RAF Has Hurled 136,000 Tons of Bombs on Reich

London (Wednesday), Aug. 11 (AP).—Bombers of the Royal Air Force have dropped 136,100 tons of bombs on the whole of Germany since the war began, official Air Ministry statistics revealed today.

Of this total, which covered the period from September 3, 1939, to July 31, 1943, more than half was dropped since last January 1.

The Ruhr has taken 68,700 tons of bombs, more than half the total tonnage for Germany. Of that amount 44,700 tons were dropped during the first seven months of 1943.

The RAF and the American Air Forces together in the Mediterranean dropped 28,000 tons of bombs from June 10, 1940—the day Italy declared war—until last June 30. Of this total 22,700 tons were loosed in the first six months of this year.

War Sidelights

Hitler's Paper Asks Civilians Fleeing Cities to Remain Loyal

Bern, Switzerland, Aug. 10 (AP).—Adolf Hitler's newspaper, Voelkischer Beobachter, appealed today for loyalty on the home front as the attitude of the civilian population toward the heavy bombings of the Reich and the military reverses in Russian and Sicily became a cardinal element in Axis plans for carrying on the war.

The Beobachter's appeal, addressed to those from the evacuated zones and inserted into its news columns as a small box, said, "You who come from the air raid emergency areas have shown exemplary conduct. Be likewise true to your foster district with your confidence to help maintain the inner front."

The newspaper added in an editorial that the Allied air war was not "calculated with" and "today is the special worry of the German leadership."

Tea Supply Purchased

London, Aug. 10 (AP). — Lord Woolton, food minister, announced today he had bought the world's non-Axis tea supply for next year estimated at 312,500 tons.

He did it as a representative of the combined food board which, under international agreement, will allot tea to the United and neutral nations on the same basis as last year.

Ministry Rumored Moved

London, Aug. 10 (AP).—The Morocco radio, in a broadcast recorded by the Associated Press, quoted the German clandestine station, Atlantique," today as saying the Germans foreign ministry already has been moved from Berlin over the threat of heavy raids.

Americans May Stay

Melbourne, Aug. 11 (AP).—Many American servicemen desire to settle in Australia after the war, retiring United States Consul General Erle E. Dickover said tonight. "The common war has chucked the necessity of Australia-American cooperation into our lap," he added. He spoke at a farewell meeting.

Dr. Puritch Heads Cabinet In Yugoslav Reorganization

By the Associated Press

London, Aug. 10.—The formation of a new Yugoslav cabinet headed by Dr. Bozhidar Puritch was announced today shortly after Prime Minister Mimilos Trifunovic had handed the blanket resignation of his entire cabinet to King Peter.

Besides being prime minister, Puritch took over the portfolios of foreign affairs and acting war minister.

Others in the new cabinet included Gen. Draja Mihailovic, minister for war, air and navy, who was the only member of the old cabinet remaining in the new one.

Puritch, a distinguished Serb diplomat, is a son-in-law of M. Pasitch, who was Serbian premier in the last war.

The ne wgovernment is expected to move to Cairo this month.

The cabinet crisis was said to have been provoked by the demands of Croat members of the cabinet that an agreement be reached about the future constitutional structure of Yugoslavia.

The cabinet members, split by strong differences of opinion, had several stormy sessions in the last few days. Thus Trifunovic's resignation occasioned no surprise.

The outgoing cabinet was formed last June 27 by Trifunovic, former minister of education, at the request of the King.

Roosevelt Arbiter Over U. S. Policy On Discrimination

President Roosevelt will be the final arbiter on Government policy for combating racial and religious discrimination in training and employment.

An operating agreement announced by the War Manpower Commission and the Fair Employment Practice Committee yesterday called for cooperative action between the agencies, but provided that where WMC Chairman Paul V. McNutt and FEPC Chairman Francis J. Haas are unable to agree on policy, they will submit the disputes to the President for "final disposition."

Boston Merchant Dies

Boston, Aug. 10 (AP).—Felix Vorenberg, chairman of the board of directors of the Gilchrist Co., one of Boston's biggest department stores, and for many years its president, died today.

A founder and former president of the American Retailers Association, he came here from Germany 50 years ago and started his own company. Later he became associated with the Gilchrist store.

American Airmen Learn of Stooking

Somewhere in England, Aug. 10 (AP).—Fifty-eight members of the United States Army Air Force—the first of a group of 200 who volunteered to help British farmers bring in a bumper crop—went harvesting in England's Midlands today and incidentally discovered what the British mean by the word "stooking."

The word mystery was cleared up quickly when the boys went onto the 17-acre wheat field of Farmer James Harris and began the task of shocking wheat. They found out quickly that when a British farmer says "stooking" he means "stacking."

Gandhi Detained Year, Disturbances Minor

Bombay, Aug. 10 (AP).—Completion yesterday of the first year of the detention of Mahatma Gandhi and other Indian Congress leaders passed off generally without any large-scale disturbances although there were a number of arrests, it was announced today.

In Ahmadabad, Gandhi's home town, there was some stone-throwing and police reported that mills and markets were closed for the day.

If you would be active, productive and of good morale, a new shift of wonder workers must report each day for duty in your diet. These wonder workers are the mighty B vitamins and there are more than a dozen besides the well-known B_1. Whether obtained from your food or from other sources, they spend the day improving your efficiency and keeping your wits sharp. Then they vanish mysteriously . . . and must be replaced.

Nature is none too generous with these essential vitamins in the food that comes to your table. Besides, the best of cooks can easily destroy them. That is why more and more people are supplementing their daily diet with the B Complex vitamins in concentrated form.

The Home of Budweiser is one of the world's biggest sources of natural B Complex Vitamins. They are produced from brewer's yeast. We supply food and pharmaceutical manufacturers with a huge volume of this vitamin yeast each year. They in turn supply our armed forces and civilian population with millions of vitamin units. Alert Finds Most of Workers At Command Center Missing and was followed by the second blue at 11:35 a. m. The all-clear sounded at 11:45 a. m.

To add to the apparent confusion the regular noontime test of air-raid signals was sounded 15 minutes later.

Yesterday's test, the first here since June 23, was also the first daylight test since the First Fighter Command of the Army announced in June that tests would be held without advance notice. Maj. Gen. John T. Lewis, commander of the Military District of Washington, ordered the alert.

Test Only "Fair"

Porter A. Lumpkins, who was acting Director of District OCD, characterized the test as only "fair."

He revealed that the command center "functioned poorly" because of the lack of operators and that the chiefs of PUC and Medical Services were absent, as were their deputies. The chiefs of Public Works, Transportation, and Police and the Chief Air Raid Warden, William J. Mileham, were reported present.

The commander of the center, H. A. Friede, was not present, Lumpkins disclosed. He said, however, that Friede was at the Air Raid Warning Center at McMillan Park with General Lewis.

Commenting on the absence of "key" individuals at the command center, Commissioner Young stated he intends to have service chiefs name deputies.

"Some of them apparently named deputies yesterday," Young said, "but the deputies didn't show up, either."

The test was the twenty-fourth since the organization of the OCD. Nearby counties, Prince Georges, Montgomery and Arlington, also participated in the alert.

The last daylight drill was held here on March 2.

Labor Department Has Two Alerts

By sheer coincidence, the Labor Department overdid its air raid alarm practicing yesterday, tying up important WLB, NLRB and other busy labor units for more that 90 minutes.

Building wardens last week decided it was about time to test department employes. The alert was set for 10:30 a. m. (How did they know the Army, too, liked Tuesday for air raid practice?)

The Labor Department's alarms sounded on schedule, Employes cleared out to shelter areas "pretty good," according to J. W. O'Connell, assistant warden. The practice ended by 10:55 and by the time workers got back to their desks the Washington blue sounded at 11:16 a. m.

Response to the second practice was "much better," O'Connell reported He said the time lost was approximately 1 hour and 15 minutes, but he thought "it was well spent."

Nelson Surveying U. S. War Industry to Be Prepared for Sudden Ending of Conflict

Nelson Sees Problem

Nelson, it was said, is proceeding on the theory that WPB "scrambled the industrial eggs" and thus is the logical agency to "unscramble" them.

The WPA chairman's developing approach to painless industrial demobilization is divided into two parts:

1: Renewal of necessary civilian production during war production, as material becomes available and demands grow imperative. This phase of the overall program is already operating and will obviously require little attention when demobilization is finally ordered.

2. Establishment of a basic operational plan to throw into action immediately should a momentous war development occur. This plan will be sufficiently flexible to operate in part should such a contingency arise as a sudden end of the European part of the war.

In this basic plan, Nelson intends to include specific contract termination procedure and provisions to help industry meet the costs of reconversion. Likewise, there will be a clear declaration of policy on how industry will liquidate huge war inventories.

Demobilization Plan

Nelson expects to have this basic industrial demobilization plan ready when Congress convenes in the fall. At that time, the pertinent parts of the plan will be presented before the Special Postwar Economic Policy and Planning Committee headed by Senator George (Democrat) of Georgia.

As to the mechanics of reconversion, when the times comes, WPB will proceed first to demobilize industries which can give greatest employment and which manufacture goods in biggest immediate demand.

A logical contender for first attention, it was said, is the automobile industry. War elimination of automobile production and subsequent restraints on purchases has created an immense backlog of demand.

Then would follow other heavy industries—like those producing refrigerators, vacuum cleaners, farm machinery, washing machines. Last will be luxury manufacture.

This conversion will not take place over the heads of industrial leaders. Nelson was said to be convinced that the job cannot be done without direct cooperation from industry.

To this end, it was said, special task forces will be established to help with the reconversion of each particular industry. WPB will serve largely as a traffic cop to prevent "industrial traffic jams."

In the case of the automobile industry, and similar business, subsidiary plants, no matter how small, likewise will get early demobilization attention.

At the moment, it is understood, the automobile industry is exerting considerable pressure to be heard on a reconversion plan embodying the following salient points:

1. Early and uniform agreement with the Government for quick removal of Government-owned machinery and inventories from the plants when contracts are terminated.

2. Manufacture of planes by former automobile plants should be as quickly as possible shifted back to plane manufacturers.

With such an understanding, the automobile industry contends, reconversion could be accomplished quickly and easily with hardly any additional direction from the Government.

The automobile industry, echoed by other large industrialists, has expressed fear that lack of planning and understanding now will cause the same confusion and hesitation that arose when America was suddenly forced by war to change from peace to war production.

Nelson, however, has withheld commitment on this phase of the war effort to avoid controversy over whether WPB is pulling back too soon from exclusive war production.

WPB still is driving all its energies toward meeting vital war production goals. In view of the large month by month rise in scheduled requirements during the next six months, the average monthly output must be 30 per cent higher than the average output during the preceding six months.

To maintain war production at increasingly higher levels, Nelson is said to recognize the need of assuring industry of orderly industrial demobilization when the time comes, particularly when heartening war dispatches create a dangerous psychology suggesting that victory is around the corner.

Farmhand on Trial Again Today as Woman's Assailant

Archie Lee Pearson, 50-year-old Poolesville, Md., farmhand, will go on trial in Howard County Circuit Court at Ellicott City, Md., today on charges of attacking a 30-year-old married woman. This is his second trial, the Maryland Court of Appeals having set aside a previous conviction and death sentence.

Pearson is alleged to have made advances to the wife of a Poolesville farmer who had given him a lift in his truck and then, by displaying a knife, to have forced the husband out of the car.

State's Attorney Joseph B. Simpson, jr., and his assistant, Alfred D. Noyes, will be assisted by State's Attorney C. Ferdinand Sybert of Howard County in the prosecution.

Husband of WAC Can't Collect as Dependent Kin

No, a dependent husband doesn't get $50 (or any other sum) a month from his wife's service in the WAC.

The War Department's Office of Dependency Benefits so advised a 39-year-old Texan who wrote for information on whether such a family allowance was available to him.

Beginning September 1 WACS may apply for family allowances for other dependent relatives but the law specifically excepts husbands.

fighting captured Pyatnitskoye, 22 miles northeast of Kharkov.

The Germans seemed to be in full retreat in this sector, and pursuing Russians wiped out more than 100 enemy troops and captured great quantities of war materials including 10 tanks.

Kharkov was now cordoned on thre sides, with only the southwest left open for German withdrawal.

Driving toward Bryansk to the north, the Russians met the enemy in head-on battle near the Khotinets station, 45 miles away from their objective. The Germans had brought up two armored trains with large forces of infantry and tanks, but after bitter fighting, the Russians broke through and came in to capture Khotinets from the north and east.

German Toops Routed

The beaten Germans were in full rout. One of their armored trains was smashed by Russian big guns and an airdrome fell before a Russian attack. So swift was the advance that the Soviets were able to capture 25 planes, 5 tanks, 15 guns and 30,000 bombs.

Red airmen brought down 46 German planes in the day as they lent heavy support to the ground drives. On all fronts 84 enemy planes were brought down and 35 tanks destroyed.

The Germans, while contending that defense measures were satisfactory, admitted that "the Soviet thrust aiming at Kharkov is still of great force so that the fighting is still of a fluctuating character."

Capt. Ludwig Sertorious, Transocean military correspondent, said German reserves have been thrust into the area and have made their weight felt.

The German defensive system has gained in density and depth so that "the danger of an operative breakthrough may be regarded as checked," Sertorious said. He described the German operations west of Orel as "a slow movement of detaching from the enemy with the aim of shortening the front" and added that it had not yet been fully completed.

Report From Nazis

The Russians, he said, have been forced to give up their attack south of Lake Ladoga as well as on the central Donets and Mius fronts, indicating that they will now concentrate and continue mass attacks at focal points rather than making diversionary thrusts.

His broadcast on the Berlin radio was recorded by the Associated Press.

The Germans said other Russian armies were attacking with tanks, multiple guns, infantry, planes and flame throwers in the region west and southwest of Vyazma, in yet another offensive aimed at the great base of Smolensk, 230 miles west of Moscow.

"The struggle is growing in intensity and extension," the German radio said of the Vyazma battle. The Russians have said nothing of such an engagement. Soviet policy is to announce offensives only after a notable breakthrough has been achieved and the goal is in sight.

the key cities of the country The Post pointed out that at Guadalcanal there have been Army, Navy and Marine Corps air squadrons, each using its own independent supply system, ground crew and maintenance equipment. The Post contends that "our bomber strength is divided" and advocates the creation of a chief of staff for air warfare in Washington.

Secretary of the Navy Knox said in a press conference last week that he is opposed to the establishment of a separate air force. Others contend that while a unified air command may be sound in principle, it might be difficult to undertake the necessary reorganization of the air forces in the midst of war.

While public opinion on this subject is only one factor and the ultimate decision will be up to the President, it is interesting to note that the idea of a separate air force has long been favored by that section of the general public familiar with the discussion.

A survey a year ago—in September, 1942—found a substantial majority favoring the proposal. The general opinion was summed up by one voter in the words: "That's the only way we'll ever give full weight to the power of modern air forces in wartime."

Although the vote today is somewhat smaller than it was a year ago, it is too early to tell what effect the campaign by The Post and by Maj. Alexis de Seversky and other aviation experts will have on the public's attitude toward unifying the Nation's air power.

Kidnaped Baby Back Home

Associated Press WIREPHOTOS

Adair at the time.

Weinrick, commenting on the asserted spontaniety of her plan, said, however, that the couple with whom Mrs. Wright told him they heard her ostensibly telephone the hospital at 10:30 Monday night that she was coming there to have a baby.

Weinrick said Mrs. Wright got all the possible "breaks." The main door normally locks automatically, but apparently had caught, slightly ajar. The only nurse on the floor at that hour was busy in patients' rooms and had no chance to see Mrs. Wright in the hall. Weinrick said he was convinced there was no negligence on the part of the hospital staff.

Mrs. Wright said in her statement that she was born in New York, was divorced from Francis J. Held in Los Angeles in 1939 and then went to Honolulu. In 1940 she married a man named Woodrow Morgan, but the marriage was annulled three days later.

She said she was at work at Hickam Field when the Japanese attacked the islands December 7, 1941. Her neck was broken, four ribs were fractured, and she suffered three shrapnel wounds in the head, she asserted.

She was married to Jesse Wright in Reno, Nev., last October.

Mrs. Wright, sobbing continuously, was arraigned today on a charge of child stealing.

While the police questioned the 26-year-old woman, Judith spent much of the time in the arms of her mother, Mrs. W. B. Gurney. Mrs. Gurney, near collapse and in a critical condition for days after learning of the disappearance of her infant daughter, seemed nearly recovered.

Weinrick delved into her background in a search for a motive for taking the child whom she claimed at first as hers. A medical examination disclosed that she had not had a child for 5 years. She then changed her story.

Sergeant Wright said his wife told him she was expecting a baby, and that he believed her. He said he accepted the Gurney baby as his own.

Mrs. Jack Green, a neighbor, said Mrs. Wright told her she was going to bear "a nice fat little baby girl." She told the neighbors she was going to the hospital, but appeared at home the next day with the baby. She told neighbors that the birth was "easy" and that she was sent home because of the shortage of hospital beds.

Wilson, speaking for the committee, deplored existing violations but pointed out that only an "extremely small" percentage have been found guilty. The good record, he said, is partly due to the association's educational program.

Harry Witt, 100 E st. nw., charged with having meat with skippers.

Simon Schwartz, 200 G st. nw., charged with an unclean meat slicer, floors and shelves, dead flies.

Sherman Howard, 2744 14th st. nw., charged with having flies and gnats in store, leaking garbage cans outside.

Glenn Rawley, described as operator of a bottling plant at 215 7th st. sw., forfeited $25 on a charge of having old junk and trash on the floor, and a dirty toilet.

Moscow Dateline

Attempt To Burn Moscow Fails

Out in the yard, our neighbors were dragging their belongings from the burned house. The fire appeared to be under control after eating out the roof and upper story. People were swarming into the street to take stock of the damage. Through them, jouncing over the cobblestones of Ostrovsky Pereoulok, Pavel drove up with my car, and we raced off to the foreign commissariat to do the story.

It was growing light by then, and the streets were as full as though it were midday. To my surprise, away from Ostrovsky Pereoulok, very little damage was apparent. What had seemed to be a withering raid turned out to have been a light one. Most of the impression of intensity, given by that first raid and subsequent ones, came not from the violence of the bombing, but of the anti-aircraft defenses.

HENRY C. CASSIDY

Going down Arbat Street, we passed Foreign Commissar Molotov, driving out of town as though going home from his usual night's work. With the rest of Moscow's four million, he had sat out the raid in the city. Later, I learned that Premier Stalin had his own air-raid shelter inside the Kremlin. One swift private elevator carried him down from his second-floor office to the ground, and a second, deep underground, to the shelter. There a steel door shut and the leader was safe. Inside was a green-covered conference table around which he and his Politburo could work despite the raids.

In that first raid I saw, on my way to the foreign commissariat, a bomb had fallen in Mokhavaya Street, midway between the Kremlin and the United States Embassy, less than 100 yards from each. It made a crater, but did no damage. That was the only bomb I could find in the center of the city. Neither the Kremlin nor any other public building showed any evidence of damage.

Decided Failure

At 5:30 a. m., the foreign commissariat issued a communique. More than 200 German planes attempted a mass attack on Moscow, it said, but only isolated bombers broke through the defenses, the rest being dispersed, 17 brought down. Several private houses were set afire and a small number of persons was killed ,it acknowledged, but no military objective was reached. "That attempt," it said, "should be considered a failure."

It certainly was. The Germans tried to burn Moscow, as they did London, but failed.

The Nazis were not easily to be denied their prey.

The raids became a siege. Nightly, the Germans came to hammer at the Moscow citadel. They pressed home some heavy blows. A shower of incendiaries reached the capital's wheat-storage center, putting a great grain elevator in flames. So intense was the heat that the clothing of the firemen caught fire but they went forward, the men behind pouring water on those ahead, and finally extinguished the blaze. A railway yard, holding boxcars loaded with bottles of combustible fuel, also was fired, but saved. Here and there, along the streets, the powdered plaster ruins of bombed houses became more and more apparent.

Prohibitive Price

Moscow fought back sturdily. The enemy lost 10 to 11 per cent of its attacking planes from the very start of the bombings—a prohibitive price. Night fighters accounted for most of them. Antiaircraft guns and balloon barrages took the rest.

The people stood the test well. Subway trains stopped running at 10 p. m., and many took refuge there. The rest stayed at home. I spent one night in the Palace of Soviets station. Never had I seen people so patient, so calm, when around them others were fighting and dying.

Most of the nights I spent in the foreign commissariat shelter, since the start of the raids usually coincided with the hour for the nightly military communique.

One memorable night, I spent at the Nemchinovka dacha, out the Mojhaisk highway, to get a glimpse of Moscow's defenses from the west, as the Germans saw them. Ivan Yeaton had made the dacha over into a barracks for the staff of the military attache's office. We had supper there, and while waiting for the whistle to blow, listened to little Johnny Allison's stories of flying in other countries. Capt. John D. Allison of Daytona Beach, Fla., who looked like a jockey that night in his rollneck sweater, was one of America's finest fighter pilots before the war, had flown in England, came to Russia to show the Soviets how to handle our planes, and then went on to China to become a hero.

Face Burned Half Off

Johnny told about an R. A. F. pilot whose face was burned half off when a shell hit the gasoline tank of his Hurricane during the battle of France. Still, he succeeded in parachuting to the ground. As he lay there, snipers started to pot him. They got him, first in an arm, then in a leg. Then they rushed him. "Good God," one of them cried. "We've shot one of our own fellows, an Englishman."

"No; you haven't," said the flier. "I'm a South African."

They took him to a hospital, but had to evacuate him soon to escape the oncoming Germans. They put him in an ambulance, which bounced so badly he was thrown out of his stretcher, and the man above fell on him. They took him to Dunkerque, and placed him in a ship. It was sunk. Still, somehow, he got back to England—and flew again.

As we sat around the fire, listening, the sound of Moscow's air-raid alarm came to us, like the whistle of a toy train peeping in the distance. We went out to a ridge, under the trees, and watched. It was a magnificent sight, like a small boy's dream of the world's greatest fireworks show.

Real Thing, All Right

There had been some skepticism abroad as to whether these defenses were really as strong as they were supposed to be, whether the Germans were really trying to bomb Moscow or just putting on nuisance raids. Out there, as Johnny read the skies, I found the answer. It was the real thing. As the shells burst, the fires started and the planes droned over, one after the other, on their run in, Johnny told me he had never seen such a barrage or so many searchlights.

The Germans began to come less frequently to Moscow. They were still fairly regular, but not nightly callers. During the long winter nights, that situation prevailed, with isolated bombs falling by day or night. One broke the facade of the Bolshoi Theater. Another wrecked the main Moscow University building. Another demolished the headquarters of the central committee of the Communist Party. A huge 2000-pounder fell at the corner of Mokhovaya and Gorky Streets, the heart of Moscow, just outside the National Hotel.

The American Embassy staff, having lunch in the hotel, heard the thump and thought it was a distant explosion. Actually, it was a dud which buried itself 27 feet into the ground. Had it gone off, they never would have finished that or any other lunch. The bomb was dug out and removed by hand, lest any shock set it off and wreck the Embassy, next door to the hotel, or the Kremlin, across the street.

But the bombings dwindled steadily. During the spring, the Germans came only occasionally, and then often only to the outskirts. They made their last raid the night of April 5, 1942. Discouraged, they went away, never to return that year. The boxscore of the eight months of raids, as drawn up by Vassily Pronin, chairman of the Moscow City Soviet, showed:

Dead	1,088
Incendiaries dropped	35,000-40,000
Explosives dropped	200-300
German planes downed	1,100

Most of the dead—767—fell in the first month of bombing. Many more heavy explosive bombs—1500 to 1700—fell outside the city. Their bearers never reached their objectives.

A year after the raids started, my neighbors cleared away the weeds which had sprung up in the blackened second-floor timbers of their house, built a new roof, and moved back to their home. For the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Bolshevik Revolution, November 7, 1942, the Bolshoi Theater emerged from its scaffolding with a new, gleaming white facade. As a bombless winter set in, the street lights went on once more, glowing faintly but cheerfully in Red Square, along Gorky Street and down the Arbat.

Legislation to Stop Army's Drafting of Fathers Promised by Rep. May When Congress Meets

By Francis M. Le May
Associated Press Staff Writer

Legislation prohibiting the drafting of fathers and setting a definite limit on the size of the armed forces—probably at 10 million—was proposed yesterday by Chairman May (Democrat) of Kentucky of the House Military Committee.

May announced he would introduce such a measure on September 14, the day Congress returns from its summer recess, and said it might also provide for the discharge of fathers already in the armed services.

The announcement followed a statement by Paul V. McNutt, war manpower director, that fathers between 18 and 38 years old would be reclassified and made available for induction beginning in October.

May Predicts New Law

"I think when Congress meets," May told newspapermen, "they are going to pass legislation prohibiting outright the induction of fathers. I think they will determine that the Army is big enough with the 80,000 18-year-olds being inducted monthly keeping it current. We now have under arms approximately 10 million men."

May said his measure would not differentiate between the fathers of children born before or after Pearl Harbor. He expressed belief Congress is opposed to the induction of fathres, and that "the home is the basis of our country and it should be protected as far as possible."

A few days before Congress recessed in July, the Senate Military Committee approved a bill by Senator Wheeler (Democrat) of Montana to prohibit the drafting of fathers for the remainder of 1943. The House previously had passed a measure by Representative Kilday (Democrat) of Texas to prevent induction of married men before all eligible single men in a State had been taken, but this measure has been gathering dust in the Senate for several months.

Not Afraid of Veto

May said he did not believe President Roosevelt would veto legislation against father inductions. He explained that his measure would allow any married man to volunteer for the armed services.

The Military Committee chairman criticized McNutt and Maj. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, Selective Service Director, for what he termed "conflicting statements that are confusing the people."

"I think McNutt and General Hershey ought to get together and promptly agree on some statement and then quit making statements," he said.

Points to Inefficiency

May told newspapermen that when the War Department asked to lower the draft age to 18, several high Army officials testified before his committee that "men above 38 are not good for soldiers." But now, he said, he had read that Hershey "is saying we should take men up to 45."

Discharge of fathers from the services, May remarked, "would be a fine way to get a lot of industrial workers."

He quoted a formal statement made by the Military Committee last spring as follows:

"Your committee believes it would be injurious to the welfare of our country to have local draft boards feel that men with families can be freely inducted into the armed services. There certainly is a genuine social reason for preserving established families."

Hershey Won't Predict

Los Angeles, Aug. 10 (AP).—Selective Service Director Lewis B. Hershey frankly admits "there are too many imponderables involved" right now to venture a guess as to what may happen in the father-draft situation.

"You tell me what the situation in Europe, in Russia and in the Pacific will be in two weeks or a month, and I'll tell you how the draft will be working," said the [illegible] to testify before a House Military Affairs Sub-

"I can't make any predictions about fathers or essential workers—too many imponderables are involved, he added in a press conference, "but you may rest assured that we will scrape the bottom of the barrel and pool all the manpower we have before we turn to fathers."

Ex-Editor Pleads Not Guilty of Failing to Register

Domenico Trombetta, former editor of an Italian language newspaper, pleaded not guilty when arraigned yesterday in District Court on an indictment charging him with failing to register with the State Department as an agent of the Italian government.

Trombetta was brought here from New York, where he had been interned on Ellis Island. Born in Italy, he was a naturalized American citizen.

It was charged that until December 7 1941, he acted as an agent of Italy in an attempt to influence, persuade, and mold public opinion in matters of political and foreign affairs. Trombetta, it was said, was a member of the Fascist League of North America from 1925 until its dissolution in 1929.

Trombetta took the pauper's oath and was sent to District Jail. No bond was fixed. The court will appoint an attorney for him, Justice Alan Goldsborough said.

Ideas for that main course

It can be a fascinating game these days—trying to figure out what to have for that main course. Despite shortages in some foods, those main dishes must be hearty, appetizing, attractive and budget-fitting. Here are some suggestions that may help.

MACARONI MEAT LOAF — Cook 2 cups macaroni in boiling, salted water until tender. Combine with ¾ to 1 pound ground meat, beef, lamb, veal or pork or combinations of these meats. Add 2 cups chopped tomatoes, chopped onions and green peppers to taste, and season with salt and pepper. Add 1 or 2 beaten eggs and turn into a greased loaf pan and bake in a moderate oven (350° F.) for about 1 hour until meat is done. It is your meat and starch courses all in one, and it makes meat go twice as far.

STEW A LA MODE—Cook stew as usual, adding vegetables (but not potatoes) in season. When done, thicken the liquid and pour gravy, meat and vegetables into a casserole. Top with hot, mashed potatoes, and place in a hot oven (450° F.) for about 10 minutes or until potatoes have turned a toasty brown. Serve at once. This stew may well be a company dish for all its goodness and eye appeal.

CHEESE DITTY—Saute 2 or 3 tbsps. chopped onion until limp, then add 2 or 3 chopped tomatoes, salt, pepper, and a dash of sugar and simmer for about 10 minutes. Add ¼ to ½ pound of grated cheese and cook until melted and thoroughly blended. Finally, add 1 beaten egg gradually and stir constantly to blend in the egg smoothly. Cook just a minute longer until velvety in consistency. Serve immediately on thin, hot toast.

NEPTUNE PIE — Place 1 to 2 cups cooked, flaked fish in a greased casserole. Make 2 cups white sauce, and fold in a well-beaten egg and season with salt and pepper. Pour this sauce over the fish and top with 1 cup fresh bread crumbs, dot with bacon drippings or other fat, and bake in hot oven (425° F.) for about 15 minutes or until crusty brown. Grand for Friday and any other day. Use any kind of fish, canned, fresh cooked, or shell fish.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

By Drew Pearson

It looks as if the whisky distillers never learn. For more than a week they have been closeted with the War Production Board trying to put over a deal whereby they will be permitted to resume manufacture of whisky on a limited scale—even at a time when the Nation is so desperately hard up for feed grain that it is feeding wheat to cattle instead of humans.

To start the distilling of whisky would mean a further use of grain, thus depleting the supply for cattle, hogs and chickens.

Despite this, the whisky distillers have been waving the Constitution, roaring about involuntary wartime prohibition and arguing that there are ample stocks of war alcohol on hand.

The latter, of course, is true. Alcohol stocks are ample, and the manufacture of explosives has been curtailed. However, two counter-factors have been pointed out by WPB officials. One is the discovery of several new uses for alcohol. One of these is an important war use, so far a carefully guarded secret, which may require more alcohol.

But even more important, WPB officials point out, is that the country is desperately hard up for grain. Seldom in history has wheat been fed to animals instead of people. And should there be a drought next year and the wheat crop injured, then with reserves depleted, the whisky distillers would get the blame.

More than 10 million bushels of grain per day are required for feeding livestock and poultry. Where we are going to get it during the coming year, already has the War Food Administration baffled. The estimated 1943-44 supply of grain is 12 per cent less than last year's, and simultaneously livestock on farms will be 5 to 10 per cent greater.

The Agriculture Department has already warned livestock producers to conserve feed. Yet at the same time, the distillers have been lobbying their ears off to divert grain to whisky.

Mr. Littell Goes To Dinner

NORMAN LITTELL, the young Assistan. Attorney General who forced Secretary Knox to dough up the amazing Elk Hills oil deal, has an amazing memory for the law, but when it comes to his own clothes it is another matter.

The other night he was invited to dine with Swiss Minister Charles Bruggmann, brother-in-law of Vice President Wallace, and according to Mrs. Littell, his concentration on Elk Hills rather than clothes caused a row in the Littell family.

To save time and gasoline, Littell dresses for dinner at his office, but this time he telephoned his wife at the last minute that he had forgotten to bring his collar and cummerbund. He asked her to meet him outside the door of the Swiss Legation with these articles very essential to dining out in summertime Washington.

Mrs. Littell dutifully obeyed. Arriving on time, she stood hopefully outside the Swiss Legation, holding a man's collar in one hand and a black cummerbund in the other. Presently the guests began to arrive.

"Where's Norman?" asked Assistant Secretary of War McCloy as he noticed Mrs. Littell standing expectantly in front of the legation.

"I'm waiting to finish dressing him," replied his patient wife.

Next came William Batt, vice chairman of the War Production Board, and Mrs. Batt. "Aren't you coming in?" they asked.

"No; I'm looking for a man without a collar, a necktie or a cummerbund," replied Mrs. Littell.

Next arrived Vice President and Mrs. Wallace.

"Why don't you let me stay out here and help dress Norman," Mr. Wallace suggested, after taking in the situation. "You go on in and I'll wait for him."

But Mrs. Littell thought her husband would be a bit embarrassed at having the Vice President of the United States act as his valet.

A moment later Littell arrived, slipped on his collar, necktie and cummerbund, and went down the receiving line. Each lady—Mrs. Bruggmenn, Mrs. Wallace, Mrs. McCloy, Mrs. Batt—greeted him with:

"Well, Mr. Littell, I see you have your collar and cummerbund."

"Why," whispered Mr. Littell to his wife, "did you have to tell them all about it?"

Fourth Term

CLOSE FRIENDS who have talked with the President lately are not at all sure he wants to run for a fourth term. Naturally, he is not telling even his closest intimates what his real hopes are any more than he told anyone prior to the third-term convention in 1940.

But one or two hints that he has dropped lead friends to believe that the President emphatically would not run again if the war is won, and would run only reluctantly if the war is still in progress.

However, there is one ambition he deeply cherishes, namely, to help write a permanent peace. Having taken an active part in the last war as Assistant Secretary of the Navy and having seen the "war to end wars" turn into an abortive and stymied peace, the President wants more than anything else not to repeat Woodrow Wilson's failure.

Therefore it is not beyond the realm of possibility that to bring about a nonpartisan peace treaty, Roosevelt would be willing to make an agreement with a broad-gauged Republican who supports his foreign policy, whereby that Republican would get the nod for the White House, if FDR in turn sat at the head of the Peace Conference.

All this, of course, is still in the realm of speculation, but also within the realm of possibility.

Should this not materialize and should the President definitely decide not to run, then the chances are strong that he would throw the nomination to his close friend and "Assistant President," ex-Justice Jimmy Byrnes.

The President has felt that the country may be entering a period when the tide has set in against New Deal reforms and that a man like Byrnes, capable of holding different elements together, is what the Democratic Party will need for the next few years.

Stockholders Approve Big Wire Merger

By the Associated Press

New York, Aug. 10.—Final steps in the creation of single national telegraph system were taken today as stockholders of Western Union and Postal Telegraph voted to marge the communication agencies.

The merger has been formally approved by Congress, the Army and Navy, and the Department of Commerce. The Federal Communications Commission, which has long urged the consolidation, now has the working plan before it for final authorization.

Albert N. Williams, president of Western Union, said that when the deal is finally consummated, Western Union will be in a far stronger position to meet competition of the telephone, the air mail and postwar developments in radio.

"Western Union will be able to offer more for less," Williams said. "The merger will be of benefit to all concerned."

A total of 12,815 Postal employes will be affected by the consolidation, and all have been promised equal terms with the 55,600 Western Union employes.

In approving the merger agreement, Western Union stockholders also approved the change of authorized capital stock from 1,050,000 shares of $100 par value to 1,543,124 shares without par value, divided into 1,235,000 shares of Class A stock and 308,124 shares of Class B stock.

Business Briefs Of D. C. Interest

Net Equals $3.78 Share

Lion Oil Refining Co. reports net income for the first six months of 1943 after all charges except provision for Federal and State income and excess profits taxes of $1,644,059, or $3.78 per share on 435,090 shares of common stock outstanding. After providing $986,435 or $2.27 per share for Federal and State income and excess profits taxes, net income amounted to $657,624, or $1.51 per share. For the first six months of 1942 net income after charges but before taxes was $1,408,405, equivalent to $3.23 per share of common. Provision for taxes in the 1942 period was $845,043, or $1.94 per share, leaving a net of $563,362, or $1.29 per common share.

Price Average Advances

After remaining at the same level for three consecutive weeks, the weekly wholesale commodity price index compiled by the National Fertilizer Association advanced to 134.8 per cent of the 1935-1939 average. It was 134.6 a week ago, 134.4 a month ago, and 128.4 a year ago. A sharp rise in farm product prices, combined with a more moderate increase in foods, was mainly responsible for the advance in the all-commodity price index.

Freight Loading Gain

Carloads handled by the Baltimore & Ohio during the week ended August 7, 1943, totaled 73,980, made up of 43,716 loaded on line and 30,264 received from connections. This was an increase of 6017 cars as compared with the same week of last year when the total was 67,963, consisting of 41,960 loaded on line and 26,003 received from connections.

Investor's Guide Issued

"The Road to Postwar Reconstruction" is the intriguing title of an investor's guide just issued by J. S. Bache and Co. of New York with branches in all principal cities including Washington.

The booklet's forword states: "Each military and diplomatic success brings nearer the period of converting our economy to the expansion that will follow for the replenishing of consumer demands and reconstruction of the world."

Postwar problems of the businessman are treated from many angles.

To Address Bankers

Among speakers at the annual meeting of the Savings Division of the American Bankers' Association in New York on September 13 will be Dr. Harold G. Moulton, president of Brookings Institution. His subject will be "Savings and Economic Security."

United's Revenue Passenger Miles Reach New High

United Air Lines has announced that its revenue passenger miles flown in July shattered all records for the company's coast-to-coast and Pacific Coast system.

United flew an estimated 33,625,100 revenue passenger miles during the month, it was announced by Harold Crary, United's vice president in charge of traffic. This gain, simultaneous with substantial increases in mail and express, represented an 8 per cent increase over the month preceding and a 35 pert cent increase over the corresponding month of last year. The previous record—32,943,600 revenue passenger miles—was established in September, 1941.

Steadily increasing volume of civilian and military traffic, linked with the war, between all cities on United's system was given as the reason for the gain. The record, Crary pointed out, was set even though there was an increase in revenue airplane miles flown only 5 per cent over the preceding month and 13 per cent over July of last year.

Western Union Gross Earnings at New Peak

Western Union Telegraph Co. reported yesterday that its gross revenues so far in 1943 have exceeded those of any other comparable period in the company's history. Net income for the first half was set at $3,619,122, equal to $3.46 a share, against $3,695,014 or $3.53 a share in the first half of 1942. Provision for Federal income taxes in the 1943 period of $2,348,000 compared with $2,144,000 in the corresponding part of 1942.

For 12 months ended June 30, equal to $8.87 a share, against net was reported at $9,278,550, $7,625,355 or $7.29 a share.

A. N. Williams, president, in commenting on the heavy volume of business, said that this record activity had increased expenses substantially.

Gen. Johnson Leaves Army To Fight for Civilian Needs

Concerned that war production may cut too deeply into the civilian economy, Brig. Gen. Robert Wood Johnson stripped off his Army uniform yesterday so that he would be free to make a stronger fight for more production for civilians.

The 50-year-old businessman and chairman of the Smaller War Plants Corporation said he had no specific disagreements as yet with Army officials. But he made clear that he thought "from here out" there would be increasing competition between war and civilian production for inadequate supplies of manpower and raw materials.

Explanation to Stimson

He wanted, he told a press conference, to become a "champion of civilian economy to a large degree" and hence had resigned his Army commission.

Johnson was an officer of Johnson & Johnson, surgical dressing manufacturers, when he entered the Army as a colonel in ordinance. He was borrowed from the War Department to become head of the SWPC, in which post he also is a vice chairman of the War Production Board. It was agreed at the time that he should retain his military status so long as it proved beneficial in carrying out his duties.

In announcing resignation of his commission, Johnson made public a letter from Chairman Donald M. Nelson of WPB to Secretary of War Stimson. This said Nelson shared Johnson's belief that it would be "less embarrassing to himself and the Army" if he returned to civilian status.

Views on Civilian Needs

The SWPC's aim is to make a greater wartime use of small plants. Much of its energy heretofore has been directed toward getting subcontracts on war work for them.

Johnson told his press conference that he believed those small plants not yet converted to war work were the most suitable for civilian production.

Discussing generally his views on production of civilian needs, Johnson said in a statement that essential civilian requirements are "essential war products in the sense that the United States can not maintain its war economy without production of many such items."

"For example," he said, a war-worker whose electric refrigerator is out of order may lose half a day at the plant waiting at home for ice to be delivered so that food will not be spoiled. A simple civilian item, hitherto unobtainable, might fix the electric refrigerator. Thus, the worker returns to full production and a growing cause of absenteeism is eliminated."

Army Engineering Courses to Start At Catholic U.

Engineering courses for servicemen to arrive on the campus September 13, were announced yesterday by Catholic University of America under the Army specialized training program, with Capt. Edward F. Quinn, jr., U. S. Infantry, detailed as commandant of the university's military unit.

Formerly assistant professor of military science and tactics at Maryland University, and physical education instructor at Takoma-Silver Spring Junior High School, Captain Quinn has been on special duty since June 15 in the Washington military district.

Senatorial Mission

Five United States Senators are now in England, the first stop in their projected tour of the active war fronts. Members of the Truman and Military Affairs Committees, their mission is to inspect American military establishments, air bases and equipment. The report which they will eventually render to Congress should have an important bearing not only on war planning and appropriations but also on the implementation of the peace.

This senatorial tour is significant as a first, tentative effort to provide for the legislative branch of our Government some of the background knowledge about the war which has been available to the Executive. For obvious reasons of military security, it is not possible to make the 531 members of Congress privy to all the details of military operations and diplomatic maneuvering. But since the cooperation of Congress is indispensable to the solution of postwar problems, it is of the utmost importance that the members be as well and widely informed as possible.

Perhaps the best means to accomplish this is through the selection of a few Congressmen to represent the body as a whole. Congress is likely to give great weight to the observations and conclusions of such representatives, particularly when they are of its own choosing—much more weight than it would be inclined to give to administrative subordinates of the President. These men who have gone abroad to see for themselves belong to the congressional family. They will do their observing from the point of view of their colleagues.

They will return, undoubtedly, with a greater appreciation than they ever had before of the magnitude of our undertaking in this global war. They will have a new insight into the problems which the executive agencies of the Government have had to face and overcome. In short, they are likely to come back with a good deal of the viewpoint of the Administration. That is altogether to be desired. For it is a prerequisite to the formulation of sound postwar policies that the points of view of the executive and legislative branches be brought close together.

Lessons From A Chart

The Treasury has published a chart graphically portraying the taxes paid by two different groups of salaried people in the United States, Canada and the United Kingdom. The outstanding conclusion to be drawn from examination of these charts is that a great deal of slack remains to be taken up in the lower income groups before the American taxpayer will be forced to shoulder a tax burden equal to that now borne by our British and Canadian allies.

Mr. Morgenthau's chart shows that a married man with no dependents, having a net income of $2000, pays an income tax of only $188 if he lives in the United States and is subject to the New York State income tax. A family head having the same income, residing in Canada, pays an income tax of $231, while an individual of similar economic standing living in Great Britain would pay $378. The differences are even more startling in the $5000 net income class, where income taxes amount to $932 for the American, $1,378 for the Canadian and $1,628 for the Englishman.

To be sure, comparisons are somewhat dangerous. Allowance has to be made for the fact that living costs are higher here than in Canada or Great Britain. Furthermore, income taxes alone provide an imperfect measure of the comparative burden of total taxes in different countries. Nevertheless, in the lower income groups, where current wages and salaries constitute the bulk of income, comparative income tax rates provide a fairly accurate gauge of comparative total tax burdens. Since Mr. Morgenthau's chart informs us that seven-eighths of the income of the United States goes to people earning less than $5000, and since those groups are paying much less to the tax collector than the Canadians and the British in like circumstances, the moral seems clear. It is that we must get more of our revenue from the people who control the bulk of the taxable income.

Doubtless the Secretary of the Treasury, in releasing this chart, was replying to Senator George. The chairman of the Senate Finance Committee lately said that any drastic increase of individual income taxes might bring about the ruin of the country's middle class. Yet the stubborn fact remains that our present inflation is a problem in surplus incomes—and in surplus incomes of people earning less than $5000.

Right Of Asylum

Secretary Hull denies that any of the neutrals have thus far refused to comply with President Roosevelt's request to deny sanctuary to Mussolini and other Axis leaders seeking refuge from Allied justice. At the same time the reaction in neutral capitals is obvious enough. It is reported from Istanbul, for instance, that the Turkish Foreign Office is said to have drafted a note asserting the right of the Turks to make their own decisions in such matters. That this right exists in international law, and has existed in Western usage for thousands of years, is undeniable. More often than not it has had religious as well as legal sanction, as, for example, in the right of temple sanctuary recognized by Roman law and the inviolability in the early Middle Ages of persons who sought refuge in Christian churches, shrines or monasteries.

It is true that the President's statement on the question was phrased as a request rather than as a threat. What the President said was that our Government "hopes that no neutral government will permit its territory to be used as a place of refuge or otherwise assist such persons in any effort to escape their just deserts." To do so would be "inconsistent with the principles for which the United Nations are fighting," and would be so regarded. Considering, however, that after the victory the United Nations will be in a position to enforce their "requests," the threat was implicit, whether intended or not, and the radio newscasters and newspaper headline writers who described it as a "warning" were probably correct.

The whole thing strikes us as having been a tactical blunder. It should be remembered that under international usage neither Hitler, nor Mussolini, nor Tojo, nor any of their gang have any right to claim asylum. If all frontiers were closed to them, and all landing fields forbidden to them, no right would be violated. Sovereign states, however, do have the explicit right to give or refuse asylum as they see fit. It may be worth pointing out that, although the United States has been among the countries which have been most generous in granting asylum to political exiles, there have been occasions on which we have seen fit to refuse it. That was the case, for example, with the late Comrade Trotsky. Also, some of our own political refugees, such as certain Confederates after the Civil War, sought and found asylum abroad. The surrender by the Vichy French of German-born Jews and other refugees to whom asylum had been granted is a pretty good instance of the surrender of the right under intimidation.

If the neutrals had accepted the suggestion of the President and had agreed not to grant any refuge, now or later, to any person who may be designated by the United Nations as an international outlaw, it is likely that the Axis would have retaliated by demanding that the neutrals close their frontiers to escaping war prisoners or to fugitive civilians from the occupied countries. That might have proved quite a boomerang. The neutrals up to now have stood firmly on their rights under The Hague conventions. The most conspicuous instance, perhaps, is that of the Swiss authorities in permitting General Giraud to continue his journey to France after he had crossed the German frontier into Switzerland.

Again, it would seem that an inept bit of diplomacy has brought our good faith and intentions into question. It must be remembered that these neutrals, who feel that their sovereignty has been impunged, have before them the example of our French policy. If, they may argue, we stubbornly refuse to grant any sovereignty to the belligerent French, who are included among our Allies, how are we to be expected to respect the sovereignty of mere neutrals? Is it, they may ask themselves, the intention of the great powers among the victors under the pretext of guaranteeing the peace to divide the globe into "spheres of influence," thereby reducing them to the status of protectorates or "native states"?

No Bargaining

Amid a great welter of rumors as to what Marshal Badoglio plans to do or not to do, the one certain fact is that, more than two weeks after the overthrow of Mussolini, he has not made peace. So far as Italy is concerned, "the war," as Badoglio said on the day he took office, "goes on." This circumstance is as disturbing to the Allies as it is encouraging to the Nazis. Not only have the Nazis been vouchsafed valuable time in which to build up their defenses in the Po Valley; they now profess to believe that Italy is really determined to keep on fighting on the Axis side. In this connection there are rumors emanating from neutral capitals to the effect that as many as half a million German troops have moved into Italy to help her resist invasion.

This may be the case, though it is very much to be doubted. Anyway, successful resistance is now impossible. For, to be successful, the defense of Italy would have to be carried out along the approaches in Tunisia and Sicily, and neither is now tenable. In Tunisia the Germans sacrificed a great many men and much materiel without doing more than delay the Allies. The same thing is now happening in Sicily. On the other hand, it is also true that if Italy were completely knocked out of the war, the blow to Germany would be great, and Germany will do everything possible to prevent it.

There is a clew to Badoglio's real intentions in a semiofficial statement issued in Rome this week. "The war," it said, "will continue, therefore, until such time as a more intelligent appreciation of the Italian situation will have dispelled preconceived ideas on diplomatic and military developments that are inconsistent with the destiny of our nation." In other words, Badoglio is still trying to bargain with the Allies regarding terms of surrender. If that is his game, it will fail. Our terms remain what they have always been: unconditional surrender.

Cradle Suffrage

The adult citizens of Georgia, who recently gave signs of having reached political maturity when they rid themselves of Gene Talmadge, have now adopted a constitutional amendment whereby the age of suffrage is reduced from 21 to 18. Governor Arnall, himself no graybeard, has announced that he will carry the cause of youth to the next Democratic National Convention, and will agitate for the adoption of a plank advocating a like amendment to the Federal Constitution. The argument seems to be that if the lads are old enough to fight, they are old enough to vote, and that we may as well give the vote to the gals as well, so as not to irritate the equal-rights ladies. This view has been expressed by various eminent authorities including Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg.

But, with all respect, the argument strikes us as a non sequitur. After all, the line that the generals were giving us when the reduction of the draft age was under discussion was that youths under 21 are more easily made into good soldiers than men who have grown to maturity in exclusively civilian environments. They are, in other words, more pliable and more amenable to "indoctrination." The older men, it seems, are a bit too set in their mental habits, a bit too prone to exercise critical judgments in matters where an instant reaction to commands is the thing to be desired. But because an immediate, unquestioning obedience is a desirable thing among soldiers, it does not necessarily follow that it is desirable among voters. Besides, was it not only the other day that Surgeon General Kirk was ascribing the prevalence of neuropsychic breakdowns among soldiers to the fact that their elders had already granted them altogether too many privileges and liberties? This is another question on which the experts ought to get their story straight.

But, assuming that ability to fight is the proper qualification for the franchise, why not carry the thing to a logical conclusion? That is to say, why not remove the right of suffrage from all those who by reason of age or sex or disability are not eligible for the fighting services? This would include Governor Arnall, Mrs. Roosevelt and Senator Vandenberg and a good many others now more or less conspicuous in the political life of the Nation. Or if it is argued that in this war we are all fighters, then why wait until a child is 18 before giving him a ballot? Why not let him have it as soon as he is able to scribble a cross on it, which should be at about the age of four or five?

Bond Volunteers

The Treasury Department is getting ready for its Third War Loan Drive—perhaps the greatest financing effort of all time. It proposes to raise during September, entirely from nonbanking sources, the staggering sum of 15 billion dollars. To do this, it will have to obtain an average investment of an extra $100 bond from every American receiving regular income, with the exception of members of the armed services. Only through the enlistment of such support by the entire American public can the menace of inflation be effectively counteracted.

This Nation-wide sales campaign will depend for its success on personal solicitation of the public by volunteer salesmen. The Treasury plans to carry its appeal to every American individually. It needs the assistance, therefore, of hundreds of thousands of volunteers—men and women—who, for the duration of the campaign, will devote their time and energy to a war job of the utmost importance. The recruitment of volunteers is already under way. For those in the District who would like to lend a helping hand, the headquarters of the local War Finance Committee are located in the Washington Building.

WOOD INCIDENT

See how this pool lies quiet, now, to show
And heaven-hungering I, so lost, between!
So near, far once, I might . . . almost . . . I think,
Stoop, now, and cup my hand, and lift it . . . slow . . .
With extreme care, unto my lips, and drink
As much of heaven as man can hope to know.

Heart's folly, this. . . . For here, the lightest touch
Would shatter heaven—that is only found
Beyond rude hands that blunder overmuch . . .
So I turn off to roam the dark, dank ground
Of summer woods—but troubled, now, and sad
For all the heavens that men have nearly had.

Policy Of AMGOT

By Mark Sullivan

Bitterly Criticized

THE AMERICAN Government has a policy about enemy countries we conquer, such as Italy, and also about countries now held by Germany, which we expect to liberate, such as France. The policy applies to practically all such countries, except Germany, which is a special case. The policy, so far as there has been occasion to put it in effect, seems firmly held by the Administration—by President Roosevelt, by the State Department, by the War Department. The policy is opposed by certain individuals and groups. But present indications are that the Administration will hold to its policy.

The policy is illustrated in the case of Sicily. It consists of two steps. First, the conquered or occupied territory is to be administered by AMGOT (Allied Military Government of Occupied Territories). AMGOT confines itself to one function—keeping order, preventing anarchy, restoring and keeping in operation the public services such as railroads, the mails, municipal governments. The sum of these activities of AMGOT amounts to keeping the occupied territory a going concern.

FOR THIS purpose, AMGOT accepts what it finds. It accepts the mayors and municipal governments it finds in office; accepts the persons operating the railroads, carrying the mails. AMGOT does not, except in flagrant instances, inquire about the politics or ideologies of the mayors, railroad conductors and mailmen.

This policy of AMGOT would seem sensible and practical. But it is criticized. Over the radio the other night a critic implied that in AMGOT's management of Sicily, every mail carrier or policeman who is a Fascist should be rooted out of office. If this were done, all would be rooted out. For under the conditions in Italy for over 20 years, hardly anyone could hold any office from top to bottom unless he was a Fascist or gave lip service to fascism. To root out every mail carrier and village policeman in Sicily who has been Fascist would be to produce the anarchy which it is the precise business of AMGOT to prevent. Fascism has now been outlawed in Italy by the new Italian government itself.

AMGOT is intended to be only temporary, and as brief as possible. After AMGOT has kept order for a reasonable time there will come the second stage of our policy. This consists of letting each country set up its own form of government. The principle here is that the new government should come from the people spontaneously—that in no case should we impose a form of government on any country.

TO ALL this Germany is an exception, for several reasons. Germany is the home of a system of militarism and a philosophy which cannot be permitted to go on. We would not concede to Germany, as we would to other countries, the right of the people to set up its own form of government, which in Germany conceivably might continue Nazism and militarism. There is another respect in which Germany is an exception, and perhaps some other countries also. In what is to be done about Germany, Russia must have a large hand.

The American policy is criticized, often bitterly, from two sources. One source is groups in America or abroad who wish for specific countries specific types of government—and wish us to impose it. These groups and individuals bring pressure upon our Government and upon American opinion. There are in America contentious racial and ideological groups from practically every country in Europe. They are energetic in propaganda and lobbying.

The other main source of criticism of the American policy comes from persons and groups who wish to use the war as a means of setting up a new form of government everywhere, a new world society. This point of view has been put in words by an English exponent of it, Prof. Harold Laski, who says we must "blast the foundations of the old society" in order to "hasten the birth of the new society that is struggling to be born." Persons who hold this view are as a rule one variety or another of Socialist or Communist.

But American policy, so far as there has been occasion to put it in effect, seems to contemplate that each country shall have the form of government and the form of society which the people of that country desire (with Germany as the exception).

Beyond this, for the future, is the matter of bringing about collaboration of the nations to preserve peace.

Mediterranean Power

By Paul Schubert

Element Of Victory

THE FIGHTING in the Mediterranean theater has been a classic demonstration of the role of modern sea power in modern war. At the beginning, back in 1940, there was a tendency to believe that "sea power," as such, had been driven from the Mediterranean by "air power." This was a muddled way of expressing the belief that Britain's Royal Navy was about to be defeated by the Italian Air Force.

But as it has worked out, the fighting in the Mediterranean has not been a contest between airplanes and ships. It has been a struggle for mastery of this important sea area, with both sides using any and all available weapons.

On the one side we have seen the German and Italian air forces and the Italian navy (plus a few German submarines). On the other side we have seen the Royal Air Force, the United States Army Air Force, the Royal Navy, the United States Navy, plus various minor allied units such as ships of the Greek navy, the French navy, etc.

SINCE 1940, the swift evolution of modern sea warfare has been mirrored in the Mediterranean fighting.

At the start, British and Italian ships fought long-range gun duels, and aircraft were used solely for reconnaissance purposes.

Then the Royal Navy trotted out the torpedo plane for the attack on the Italian ships at Taranto, and later in the Battle off Cape Matapan. In both cases, the planes were carrier-based. But the torpedo-plane attack was still in its infancy—it was seen as a crippling, rather than a killing attack. The heavy turret gun was still considered sea warfare's killing weapon.

Land-based aircraft began playing an important role in Mediterranean sea warfare in 1941. To begin with, the invasion of Crete was a new chapter in warfare. On that occasion a wide salt-water barrier was crossed by air transport, and an invading army landed on hostile soil without storming the coasts. The Germans, possessing none of the conventional sea power of ships there in the combat area, were able to use aircraft to accomplish their ends.

Meantime, up in the Sicilian Channel in Mid-Mediterranean, a terrific attempt was being made to control sea-borne traffic by the use of land-based planes. The German Luftwaffe had arrived on Sicily, and was attacking British convoys bound east and west through the narrow waters between Sicily and Africa. And the Royal Air Force, based on Malta, was attacking Italian convoys as they dashed between Italian and North African ports. Both sides were taking a heavy toll. Then the Germans got enough strength on Sicily to subject Malta to merciless bombardment, and the effectiveness of the British planes fell off—through control of the air, the Axis gained virtual control of the Sicilian narrows.

BUT LACKING the ships and equipment needed for invasion, the Axis was unable to deal a knockout blow to Malta. And when th U. S. S. Wasp, that gallant aircraft-carrier, ferried fresh planes to Malta, the island recovered its punch.

To checkmate the combat portion of the Italian navy, Britain's Royal Navy had been operating task forces of battleships plus aircraft-carriers plus cruisers and destroyers, at both ends of the Mediterranean.

Little by little, these task forces had gained marked combat superiority over Italy's surface sea forces.

But in 1942, the whole character of Mediterranean naval warfare changed. Late in 1942 the United Nations, going over to the offensive, commenced warfare of invasion.

This complex innovation involved four distinct branches of modern sea power. First, and most important, the invasion fleet—a large armada of ships specially built to transport and land the men and weapons of land warfare. There were ships for tanks and motor vehicles, ships for men, ships for field artillery—ships able to run right up onto the beaches and disembark their combat freight under fire.

Second, the supply fleet. Without supplies, no invasion could exist on hostile territory longer than a few hours.

Third, the naval force covering the invasion. This task force was a combat group intended to provide cover from enemy submarines or men-of-war.

Fourth, the air forces covering the invasion. These planes paved the way for landing by bombing the beaches and beach-heads free of surface defenders, by knocking hostile planes out of the sky, and by controlling the aerial factor of modern sea power.

All these things the Mediterranean has seen in 1942 and 1943—and American ships and aircraft have taken part in them. We have become a very active part of Mediterranean sea power.

World State

So many well meaning political dreamers are urging the creation of a world state as a bulwark against future wars of aggression, that I am moved to submit a few arguments in opposition to such a super tyranny. In doing so I shall not deal with the evident difficulties of establishing such a political leviathan; but shall assume for the moment that such a state could be established within the life period of its promotors.

The first and principal argument against a world state is that it would inevitably develop into a cruel despotism which would enslave even its most unselfish creators. Nothing less than the establishment of a single governmental system for all the world was the final purpose of all the Roman Caesars, Genghis Khan, Mohammed, and Napoleon Bonaparte and Hitler. None of these would-be global rulers would have accepted the political doctrine announced by Winston Churchill, which was to the effect that a state should have as its highest purpose the safe-guarding of individual rights in reconciliation with the broad general rights of the community.

My second point is that all history shows that the true greatness of a nation and the well-being of its inhabitants have never depended upon its territorial magnitude, nor upon the number of its citizens or subjects. The tiny state of Athens has left a greater impression upon the cultural and spiritual life of mankind than has Russia with all its uncountable acreage, or than China with all its teeming millions.

Thirdly, I submit that a government of which the governed cannot rid themselves whenever such riddance shall appear just and necessary, fails to conform to the best political philosophy as yet uttered, namely that all just government rests on the consent of the governed. How can a government which rules everybody be ended? The only way to end a world state would be by a global earthquake, or a civil war which would be just as destructive.

I believe the only way in which our United States of America can guard against a third world war is to form a military alliance with the governments of Great Britain, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, France, and South Africa; and to rid the minds of our citizenry of the delusion that the present war, or any war in the future will be a conflict ending all wars.

Soldier's Opinion

Would you allow me a small space in your paper to give a soldier's opinion about your article "GOP sees President's speech as bold bid for soldier vote."

Before last Wednesday's speech, the President had already (after the Selective Service Act) promised to protect the soldier from "selling apples" when the war is over. And that was before the presidential campaign of 1940.

If we analyze the future presidential election without any political opinions and try to find some other American capable of finishing this war and participating at the peace table with enough authority and competence to prevent another catastrophe, we wouldn't easily find him.

We must present our homage to the man who, when he assumed his office, started with enemies inside and outside the States, while the world volcano was boiling ready to erupt. Risking his health and popularity, he saved America and brought her to the stand of "First Nation of the World."

Now, a few words to the gentlemen who think that the soldiers haven't got other sources of information than the voice of the President. They are completely wrong.

Besides all the newspapers and magazines sold in camps, many soldiers receive every day their own favorite paper, which they pass on, after reading, to their friends; so when the evening is finished they have consulted a number of papers with different opinions from various States. The same thing happens overseas, of course not daily, but frequently enough. I can say that the majority of the soldiers know more now what's going on than they did in their previous civilian life.

The President or his representatives are not making political speeches to the sons and daughters overseas or here. Rather, as President of a free country and Commander in Chief, he has to make periodic reports with national and international purposes.

I'm sure that my fellow soldiers know very well that when we vote we will be electing not only the President of a free state, but the cleverest citizen of America, capable of bringing us out of the present difficulty for the happiness of the Nation and a better future for humanity.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

The Trial of Mussolini

Q. Now, then, do you remember one Haile Selassie?

A. The name is familiar, and do I recall the place!

Q. It is charged that you ruthlessly attacked his kingdom and threw him off his throne?

A. True, but I'd gladly swap places with him today!

Q. Do you believe in a personal star?

A. No, I was so full of self-confidence I didn't think I even needed one.

Q. Did you, like Hitler, play hunches in war?

A. No, but I might as well have, the way things turned out.

Q. Why did you team up with Hitler with so few misgivings? Didn't you know he had his beginning as a beer-hall agitator?

A. The only way I can figure it out now is that beer-hall backgrounds were going great at the time. They even looked like an asset.

Q. Why did you stab France in the back?

A. I deny that.

Q. Do you deny pulling a stiletto?

A. No, but I didn't know it was loaded!

Q. How about your unprovoked attack on little Greece?

A. Greece attacked me first.

Q. The facts show this to be utterly false. What makes you say such a thing?

A. I got it straight from Hitler.

Q. We show you a copy of a speech made by you. Do you recognize the part in which you told your countrymen they should live like lions?

A. Must you rub it in!

Q. Did you make that statement?

A. Yes, but that was when I was bullish on lions.

Q. Did you tell your people that war was a noble expression of man's best nature, and that the life of a warrior was the only proper role?

A. You fellows drag up everything.

Q. Did you write your own speeches?

A. Looking back, I wish it had been two other fellows.

Q. Did you or did you not picture yourself as a modern Julius Caesar?

A. Up to a given point. And that was the trouble. I must have been given the wrong point.

Q. You thought of yourself as Napoleon, too, did you not?

A. Only up to my second Brenner Pass conference with Hitler.

Q. What happened there?

A. That was the one where he told me he would play Napoleon!

Q. By the way, why did you have to go to a dozen meetings with Hitler at Brenner Pass? Weren't they too many?

A. Looking back, I realize that one was too many!

One World or Mein Kamp

It is not likely that "One World" will become the bible for America as "Mein Kampf" has for Germany. Nevertheless, its enormous sale makes interesting a comparison, or rather a contrast between the aims and ideals of the two.

The one that the race of supermen form a predatory nation, as the Vandals were at one time, and the Turks later. Only it is vastly more extensive and efficient, making the whole world tributary, subservient, indeed bond slaves to Deutschland. Not Germania militant or Germania triumphant, but Germany redeemed, regenerated, purified, justified, sanctified, beautified.

Willkie, on the other hand, advocates that the superior race renounce the exploitation of the inferior. His proposition is that ill got gains are dearly bought; that with the mastery over natural forces and which the inventors and engineers have given us we can afford to renounce our unethical methods—may even find it an advantage to ourselves.

This is an interesting proposition to make to a strongly acquisitive society like ours. Even if adopted, it is not likely that the world will shortly become a City of God; but it might not be quite such a city of destruction as it has been for the last 50 years.

More Evidence

The following extract taken from "Heart Throbs," edited by Joe Mitchell Chapelle and published by the National Magazine (Grosset Dunlop, New York), in 1905, is offered as further testimony to the fact that the Bixby letter hung on the wall of one of the colleges at Oxford University:

The Philadelphia Ledger publishes a letter written by Abraham Lincoln to a Mrs. Bixby of Boston, which the Ledger says "has been engrossed, framed and hung in one of the Oxford (English) University halls as a 'specimen' of the purest English and elegant diction extant." The letter has an additional interest. It is peculiarly appropriate now, when so many mothers are mourning their sons, who were killed in battle or suffered the worse death, that from disease.

Germany's Last Hopes

By Ernest Lindley

May Yet Avoid Utter Defeat

GERMANY'S HOPES of avoiding utter defeat rest on only three possibilities:

1. Use of a new type of offensive weapon which will suddenly revolutionize warfare. This possibility may be remote, but science and technology are racing ahead. A major development, such as a practical means of releasing atomic energy, might suddenly outmode and overwhelm all the weapons of warfare in existence. Until a war has been won and the enemy disarmed, every possibility, no matter how extreme, must be kept in mind. Without a revolutionary weapon, it seems improbable that the Germans will be able to launch another major offensive anywhere.

LINDLEY

2. A long war of defense which will sap the energy and wear out the determination of the Allies to win a complete victory. To succeed, this defensive war must be fought effectively in the air as well as on the ground. Anti-aircraft guns and the means of aiming them accurately are rapidly improving. Despite heavy losses, the Germans still have many fighter squadrons which take their toll. It is conceivable that they will be able to break the back of the Allied air offensives. If they do, quickly enough, they may be able to fight an effective defensive war on the ground. This must be regarded as a possibility, less remote than (1).

3. The splitting up of the major Allies, resulting in a negotiated peace between Germany and either Russia or Britain and the United States. This alone, or in combination with (2), now seems to be the least unpromising of Germany's narrowing hopes. To try to make this hope materialize the Germans can resort to many maneuvers. They may put on a cleaner front by subordinating and gradually eliminating the Nazi taint. They may offer extremely favorable terms to one side or the other of the alliance. They can attempt to encourage every manner of discord. But they can hope to succeed only if the Allies themselves permit their suspicions of each other to override their fears of Germany.

AT CASABLANCA President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill publicly committed themselves to "unconditional surrender." Within the alliance, this was sound political warfare. It affirmed that expediencies, such as the Darlan deal, resorted to in connection with the North African invasion, would not apply to our treatment of our enemies. It was intended, probably, to reassure Russia that the American-British combination would not negotiate a peace with Germany, under any circumstances. For consumption by Germany, it was poor psychological warfare, because, giving them little room for hope, it did not encourage internal dissension.

But "unconditional surrender" was a correct expression of British and American determination to defeat totally, occupy, disarm Germany, and keep it disarmed.

Stalin echoed the phrase "unconditional surrender" but, by implication, limited it to Hitlerite Germany. Since then, the Free Germany Committee, organized in Moscow, has outlined terms for a negotiated peace between Russia and Germany. According to this proposal, the Germans need only retire to their pre-war frontiers, throw out the Nazis, organize a strong "democratic" government—and they can have peace. They would be allowed to retain an army and an air force. Indeed, the Free Germany manifesto intimated, Russia wants Germany to be a powerful state. This is a proposition which the German generals probably would be delighted to accept. Last week, Pravda, official newspaper of the Russian Communist Party, wrote approvingly of the Free Germany Committee, without endorsing its manifesto in detail.

THE FREE Germany manifesto may be skillful psychological warfare for German consumption. But it was bad for consumption by Britain, the United States, and most of the smaller United Nations. If the Russians decide to play the balance-of-power game, keeping Germany in the European scales as an armed power, Britain and the United States might be forced to reconsider their policy.

Officials in the United States and Britain have been politely quiet about the utterances from Moscow. The President and, doubtless, Mr. Churchill, have sought patiently to overcome Soviet distrust of the West, find out what the Russians really want, and get Stalin to join them at the council table. The war has now reached a stage where by speaking with the same voice, the three major Allies probably can accelerate the crisis developing in Germany, whereas by public disharmony they can only encourage the Germans to keep on fighting while they maneuver for a negotiated peace.

Views of 4 Big Farm Groups Sought on Support-Price Plan

By Robert C. Albright

Post Staff Writer

The Administration's food high command has been sounding out heads of the four big farm organizations on possible general use of the Government's farm support price program in the forthcoming food control plan, it was learned last night.

No decisions were reached at a recent conference with War Food Administrator Marvin Jones, but representatives of the farm groups are understood to have been asked whether they would support Government price fixing of most major crops under Commodity Credit Corporation support price machinery.

The four major farm organization leaders, aligned 3 to 1 against food subsidies, were said to be willing to go along with such a program only on condition that ceiling prices not be set below support levels, to subsidize a price rollback to consumers. The one exception was reported to be President James G. Patton of the Farmers' Union, who favors a subsidized rollback.

Use of support prices as the mainstay of the coming food program would be a more cautious approach than the plan to buy whole major food crops and sell them at a loss if necessary to control living costs.

This alternative "buy-and-sell" plan," believed more generally favored within the Administration, is already before the White House in memorandum form, but has not yet been formally approved by the President.

It was considered significant therefore that farm leaders have been consulted about possible extension of the more moderate support price machinery, generally popular with farm groups.

Under the support program, as now used for pork and potatoes, the Government would have to buy up a crop only if it failed to reach the fixed support level and the program could be financed at a comparatively low cost.

It was pointed out, however, the support program could readily be converted into a program for Government purchase and resale of crops if the support price is fixed higher than OPA price ceilings.

Battled Subsidy

Some of the farm leaders are said to have made this point at their recent conference with Jones, in reserving judgment on the plan.

Beside Patton, whose Farmers' union has consistently supported Administration food policies, those consulted at the Jones conference were Albert S. Goss, master of the National Grange; Edward A. O'Neal, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, and Ezra Benson, of the Council of Farmer Cooperatives.

The Farm Bureau, as well as the Grange and the Council, battled the Administration food subsidy program to a standstill in the last term of Congress, and the conference was regarded in some quarters as a bid for cessation of hostilities.

O'Neal was out of town yesterday and Goss declined to comment on what transpired at the Jones conference. Questioned by The Post, Goss said he would favor a "sound" support price program, provided some commodities, such as meats, were not covered, and provided rollback subsidies are not involved.

Crop Prospects Dip

Report Puts Yield 6% Below 1942

Crop prospects as of August 1 are expected to be 6 per cent lower than last year but 5 per cent higher than in any previous year, the Department of Agriculture reported yesterday.

Although expressing satisfaction about the anticipated yields, War Food Administrator Marvin Jones warned that "the crops are still to be harvested, marketed and processed."

"Farmers," he pointed out, "will need additional workers for harvest and food processing industries are short-handed. The wartime food problem is not solved, although present production prospects are encouraging."

Average Weather Needed

Jones said that "the hard work and the determination of farmers have placed us in a position to meet essential food needs given average weather from now on."

Crop prospects, the report stated, improved about 3 per cent during July chiefly because of the exceptionally favorable start given to the cotton crop, the rapid growth of the late-planted corn in northern States and a continuation of favorable conditions in the wheat belt from Nebraska northward.

The forecast for corn was 2,875,000,000 bushels, which is 168,000,000 above expectations a month ago and indicates the second largest corn crop in 10 years. The forecast for wheat was 835,000,000 bushels, which is 6 per cent above expectations a month ago.

The report disclosed that there was no longer danger that late planted corn will fail to mature before the frost, although some danger of loss from drought is still to be considered.

Feed Dips From 1942

The combined production of feed grains is now expected to total more than 111 million tons, a total which has been exceeded only twice, but which would be 10 per cent below production last year.

The report stated that the estimated production of commercial truck crops in areas from which most of the fresh market supplies will come during the next few weeks is 5 per cent less than in 1942, but 3 per cent above the 1932-41 average.

July egg production, the report showed, was at peak levels in all parts of the country. In the West, it was the largest since 1931.

Potatoes Improve

Potato production was forecast at 443,067,000 bushels, compared with 434,942,000 bushels forecast a month ago. Last year the production was 371,150,000 bushels.

The report stated that present conditions point to a total supply of all fruits, including citrus, for the 1943-44 marketing season about 11 per cent smaller than last season but 7 per cent larger than the 10-year average.

Milk, the report showed, has been holding close to production at this times last year.

Senator George, Wife Come Here For News of Son

Senator and Mrs. Walter F. George (Democrat) of Georgia returned to Washington yesterday to await word of their son, Lieut. Marcus George, 31, missing in an unreported U. S. Navy airplane.

The couple left their home at Vienna, Ga., Monday, and arrived at Mayflower Hotel yesterday. The Senator said he wanted to be as near the Navy Department as possible in the event any word is received of their son.

Senator George said he knew very little about the missing plane except that it had not arrived at its station. Lieutenant George's most recent post was at Floyd Bennett Field, N. Y.

Drought Brings Crop Loss Of 1½ Million to Nearby Farms

By Hanson H. Hathaway

Post Staff Writer

Crop losses estimated upward of $1,500,000 faced farmers in Arlington, Fairfax and Montgomery Counties today as the drought ended its sixty-second day with Weather Bureau officials averring that local thundershowers, falling in widely scattered areas, "would be of no help" in saving some 250,000 acres of pasture, 10,000 acres of parching vegetables and 30,000 acres of corn.

The county-by-county picture disclosed 20,000 milk-producing cows are now being fed winter reserve silage, with a milk production loss thought now to be approximately 4000 gallons per day.

Problem for District

The dairy situation posed a problem for the District, normally consuming 80% of the milk yields of the counties. County agents called the dairy pasture situation "the most serious we have faced in years" and bleakly forecast another 10% loss in annual milk production as frantic farmers measured scanty rations for their cattle this winter.

Sweet corn, now in stalk on 60,000 acres, would be but 60% of normal yields of 40 bushels per acre, a total loss of 960,000 bushels as against average yields of 2,400,000 bushels. The corn loss, first estimated at $600,000 for Montgomery County with about $300,000 added for Fairfax and Arlington Counties, yesterday was estimated increased to approximately $1,200,000. The balance of the loss figure is taken up by 50% crop losses on some 2000 commercial farms devoting nearly 10,000 acres to vegetables for District consumption.

Vegetables Dwindling

That Washington might face a vegetable shortage, unless supplies are forthcoming from nondrought areas, was seen in Department of Agriculture and county agent figures. These revealed a minimum loss of 50 per cent was now certain in such crops as lima and soy beans, late snapbeans, cucumbers, squashes, tomatoes, leaf plants and all other vegetables planted between June 10, start of the drought, and August 1.

Burning pastures created the farmers' "toughest problem," with grim significance for the urban population. The feeding of winter silage now means that there will be less food during late winter and early spring for herds of the three counties. Short rationing of the animals will, farmers said, reduce each cow's output. And this means less milk for ultimate consumers.

Little hope is held out for relieving rain. Even should it rain, farmers and farm service officials gloomily observed yesterday that "the damage is probably done."

Heavy Dairy Losses

That dairy farmers will take a heavy financial setback was clearly seen in the fact that to provide winter food for their herds they will be forced into the market for feed. How much they will lose, as a result of drought-burned pasturage, could only be guessed at. They are now paying $54 a ton for dairy ration against $28 a year ago.

In general, early crops declined in yields from 5 to 10 per cent, according to areas affected, with potatoes in the three counties down by nearly 15 per cent, and silage crops such as oats, barley, rye and hay, although harvested in their areas, nearly 25 per cent lower than yields of last year.

Over the rest of the Nation, however, the picture was better, the Department of Agriculture reporting yesterday that the estimated corn production this year was 2,874,711,000 bushels, a gain of 168 million in estimates of a month ago.

The department's national survey disclosed aggregate crops down by 6 per cent over last year, but 5 per cent higher than in any other previous period.

The national wheat forecast was 835 million bushels, 6 per cent above last month's expectations, with oats, barley, hay, rye, sweet potatoes, sugar cane and peaches in declines ranging from 1 to 5 per cent.

Civilian Defense Pageant Plans To Include Berlin, Other Stars

Plans to have Irving Berlin head the list of stage, screen and radio stars to appear at the big Civilian Defense pageant in Griffith Stadium Friday night were announced yesterday by District Civilian Defense officials.

Berlin is scheduled to arrive in Washington today for a premiere of "This Is the Army" at a downtown motion picture theater and those arranging the pageant were assured that he would be present.

Griffith Stadium will be taken over tomorrow afternoon by a corps of volunteer workmen who will erect a replica of a typical Washington community to be destroyed in a simulated air attack. Six buildings will be constructed representing both commercial and private establishments. Planes from Bolling Field will "attack" the community and one by one the structures will be demolished by "bombs" and flame.

As the demonstration progresses, each unit of the local civilian defense protective services will swing into action, depicting rescues, gas control activities, fire fighting and other protective services.

Actual antiaircraft guns will be brought into play and huge searchlights will sweep the sky picking up the "attacking" planes. The stadium will be blacked out and during the program each event will be described in detail over the public address system.

Just prior to the pageant, which will be staged by Gene Ford, production chief at Loew's Capitol Theater, spectators will be entertained by a variety show featuring "name" stars and bands. Two orchestras, popular with local dance devotees, will be on the program. They are those of Eddie Rogers, appearing currently at a downtown night spot, and Tommy Reynolds, playing at a 16th st. hotel. Both orchestras will appear with the approval of the Musicians' Protective Union, Local 161, of the American Federation of Musicians.

Lynn Ladd, screen actress, is the latest to be added to the roster of entertainers on the program. Other popular personalities in the entertainment world will be added before the night of the pageant, Civilian Defense officials said.

Gates of Griffith Stadium will open at 7 p. m. Friday and the first event will begin at 8 p. m. Seats are unreserved and the order will be "first come, first served."

'Victory Thru Air Power' A Thrilling Documentary

By Marjorie Kelly

BILLY MITCHELL should have lived to see "Victory Through Air Power." No pleader of a cause ever had an advocate more able than Walt Disney to state a case vividly and in terms abundantly clear and immediately comprehensible to people of all sorts and all levels of intelligence.

I'm not going to review the Disney-de Seversky documentation this far ahead of time—it is scheduled for Loew's Columbia August 19—but the experience of seeing it is too impressive to keep it to one's self entirely until then.

"Victory Through Air Power" has the factual punch of a newsreel, but it is better than a newsreel because of complete selection of detail. No irrelevancies are presented; the argument which first the late General Mitchell and now Maj. Alexander P. de Seversky have advanced steadily is presented step by step, with irresistible logic.

Walt Disney, who is one of the reasons why the American people are the best informed in the world, made some enlightening remarks about the postwar use of films of this sort on a recent broadcast of NBC's "For This We Fight."

Foreshadows New Educational Era in Films

"It is not visionary or presumptuous," he said," to anticipate the use of our medium in every schoolroom in the world. The motion picture never will replace the teacher in the classroom, but when educators and motion picture producers begin to cooperate in earnest on a constructive program of visual teaching, the possibilities offered are without limitation."

On the subject of education, Disney reminded that "more than three million persons in this country alone cannot so much as write their own names, and there are 15 millions more who are unable to read a newspaper."

Such a film as "Victory Through Air Power" has tremendous force as a medium of mass education. And in a democracy it is vital to reach these millions whose meager comprehension is unequal to the task of interpreting abstract facts on the printed page. Facts illuminatingly personalized do reach these people, and it is a thing which must be done. So we can look at "Victory Through Air Power" as probably the forerunner of a new era in education after the war. Statistics now available show that, for the most part, the crudely made educational films which have been used thus far are superior to textbooks both in the ease with which the message is transmitted and in the permanency of its retention.

Educational use of animation may not be your idea of why Mickey Mouse was born, but reserve judgment until you see "Victory Through Air Power."

Bibi Osterwald, the Willard Roof's electric little entertainer who mows 'em down nightly with her Gay Nineties songs, has given 750 performances for the USO. She has sung in USO clubs, hospital wards and Army camps in and near Washington, New Jersey, New York City and upper New York State. In New York they called her "Casey Jones," because of her best known song, and letters addressed simply "Casey" reached her through USO from overseas.

Pretty exciting to the whole cast was the visitor who the other night came backstage to compliment Bibi on her performance. It was William Elliott, now president of the American Bridge Co., but in the horse and buggy days dancing partner of Eva Tanguay in the musical "Picadilly." Elliott showed Bibi some authentic Gay Nineties stage gestures, and taught her one of the routines he danced with Miss Tanguay years ago.

Revival of a Notable Film

BETTY FIELD AND LON CHANEY, JR. as they appear in a climactic moment in the film version of John Steinbeck's "Of Mice and Men." Burgess Meredith is also in the cast, playing George, the firm friend of the half-witted Lennie, whom Chaney plays

HEDDA HOPPER

'Galley Slave,' Ginger

Hollywood, Calif., Aug. 10.—Darryl Zanuck has asked Walt Disney to collaborate on Wendell Willkie's "One World." He'd like Disney to do some maps and charts and skip around the world in the style Disney employed in "Victory Thru Air Power." Disney style is both humorous and enlightening. . . . Paramount's trying to make a deal with Katina Paxinou and her husband, who's written "Song of Thieves," about the Greek underworld. If the story can be adapted to the screen, Katina will star in it. . . . Donald Culross Peattie, who wrote "The Life of Audubon," is writing "The Life of Ingrid Bergman, for Reader's Digest. . . . Lana Turner's next will be either "Frankie from Frisco," or "Music for Millions." I wish they'd stop using "Frisco." How would our town like it if they called us "Los," or just "Angeles?"

LANA TURNER

The Bean Works

I don't hold with those who claim Ginger Rogers' success came through luck. Ginger's worked like a galley slave. She's also taken chances on newcomers. A clause in her contract gives her right to select her director. She chose Garson Kanin to do "Bachelor Father," his first. Writer Billy Wilder directed, for first time, "Major and the Minor." Now Eddie Dmytryk, who's done "Hitler's Children," and "Behind the Rising Sun," two Bs which turned into As, is doing Ginger's "Tender Comrade." She plays opposite newcomer Bob Ryan. To me, that's good judgment—not luck.

Butter and Eggs

Deanna Durbin sure knows how to get her butter and eggs. She kidded Franchot Tone about being a gentleman farmer, so he ups and brings her a dozen eggs and pat of butter. . . . Speaking about farming, Paulette Goddard made a deal with the owners of "21" that she'd furnish vegetables from her farm if they'd write off all her food bills and get theater tickets for her while in New York. . . . Grace Moore tells about dining at Stork Club last winter when a man came up behind her, put his arms around her. She hugged him—and lo and behold, there was Harry Cohn. She said, "We're not supposed to be speaking!" Whereupon Harry said, "Life has been dull without you." They made up and did the town together.

He Was Tops

Edgar Bergen is back from three weeks in Newfoundland. Boys need entertainment up there so badly. They're still raving about Joan Blondell. Paul Draper had just landed. Edgar went to all sorts of small places. Once spent 48 hours in a speedboat. Water was so rough the captain, cook and oiler all got sick. Old Salt Charlie McCarthy was in his element. Watched Canadian girls drill right beside Canadian boys. He had to change his routines for the men in hospital. They laughed so hard some had to be wheeled out. . . . Randolph Scott went through the Consolidated plane plant in San Diego with Walter Marvin of New York. When they landed in the head man's office his secretary asked Randy for his autograph, whereupon Marvin said, "I'm a banker. Wouldn't you like mine?" "Only on a check," she said. Randy, with a twinkle, replied, "But they bounce so easily." Her comeback, "Haven't you heard? There's a rubber shortage. Maybe his would be OK."

Anybody's Guess

Ava Gardner couldn't wait for a final divorce from Mickey Rooney, due next March, so hopped to Nevada, where she'll be free in six weeks. Betting is on full tilt as to whether at the end of that time she'll be Mrs. Howard Hughes. . . . Maria Montez's husband, Pierre Aumont, watches her daily rushes, making sure she's properly clothed and not too sexy. . . . Rosalind Russel's sister, Mrs. Chet (Duchess) La Roche, spends Saturday here, with Roz throwing a shindig for her that night. . . . Phil Goldstone brings 50 boys once a week, pays for their 48 hours' leave in our town—for those who can't afford to come.

News Finally Got Thru

Stopped at Jerry Kern's to see the Artie Shaw baby and mother, Betty Kern. It's a cute little tyke—hands exactly like pappy's. Artie didn't know for 15 days he was a daddy—then heard it was a girl. Ten days later, by short wave, he heard he had a son. He got a message thru asking if he had twins. Finally got the straight dope that he had a boy. Artie's doing a swell job in South Pacific with his band. He refused a commission. He's been gone eight months. . . . Mary Boland and John Roche are off to Mexico for a vacation. . . . Can you imagine Hedy Lamarr killing a rattlesnake? I'll be darned if she didn't. There couldn't have been more excitement if a bomb had fallen on her house.

Sander. Gets the Lady

George Sanders, who never gets the girl, waited until he could get a lady in "The Lodger." He gets Lady Korda. Barry Byridon, who wrote "The Amazing Dr. Clitterhouse," is the crime expert on it. . . . Freddie Bartholomew also will be in Moss Hart's radio show. . . . Even actors stopped work to whistle as Orson Welles kissed Rita Hayworth when he came calling on her set. . . . Did you catch Alice Leone Moats' broadcast from Spain? Alice sure has made strides since she came here to supervise her story about a debutante some years back.

LEONARD LYONS

Loose-Leaf Notebook

New York, Aug. 10.

An elderly couple who live on Riverside Drive relate this incident—of a young naval officer who sat next to them on a park bench near the river. They studied his campaign-ribbons. He seemed lonely. "If you don't mind taking pot-luck," they timidly suggested, "we'd like to invite you to dinner. We live across the street." The officer accepted . . . He noticed that their tablewear was old and inexpensive. Then they invited him to sleep there if he had no other accommodations. He accepted. . . . The next morning, when they awoke, they didn't see him. He was gone . . . But within the week came a large package, containing Gorham silverware. In the package was a note: "Linen follows"—and a card, "Marshall Field IV."

VICTOR MATURE

From Somewhere at Sea with the Coast Guard, Victor Mature reports: "Well, what a Fourth of July I spent today—the only one, however, where I didn't have to pay for my own fireworks . . . So everybody thinks I've forgotten HER, eh? Well, my torch got so hot the other day, it melted two campaign bars right off the Hunk's uniform." . . . Margaret Bourke-White is returning to the war-sectors . . . Although the front pages are replete with items about spies in Spain, Sweden, Portugal and the Argentine, the Hays office has obtained promises from producers that no mention of espionage in countries not at war will creep into their films.

The only place in Massachusetts where the supply of beef is normal is in the jails. For under the State regulations, the county and State penal institutions grow their own food—which includes plenty of vegetables, fruit, pork and beef. The State law also provides that this prison-raised food cannot be placed on the market nor transferred to other institutions, lest it be competition with merchants who would ordinarily supply Government institutions . . . The prisoners therefore are getting regular, full portions of beef—while the authorities are appealing to the ration boards for permission to slaughter some of the surplus animals, for the benefit of county hospitals.

Chester Bowles, the new general manager of OPA, is determined not to go back to private business after the war. Bowles, formerly of the advertising firm of Benton & Bowles, will either teach, do research work, or remain in government. His biggest problem now is how to get businessmen to replace the OPA processors eliminated by Congress' budget-cuts. The businessmen simply refuse to take the beating their colleagues have been getting in Washington . . . Private Paul Seymour Harrison, who played a uniformed man in "Sister Eileen" at the Martin Beck Theater, while he was a civilian, now plays a civilian role at the same theater in the "Army Play by Play" . . . Jerry Lester will be in the new Vinton Freedley show.

At Bill Hardy's Gay Nineties last week one of the patrons called for his bill and then paid it with a check. "Bring me the change," he told the waiter—who, pursuant to routine, took it to the proprietor, for approval. Mr. Hardy asked: "Who's check is this?" and the waiter told him: "Eddie Golden's" . . . "Oh, Golden's okay," said Hardy, and quickly initialed the check, for cashing . . . The cashier glanced at the check, opened the register, and began counting the change. "Nope. Can't make it," the cashier reported to Mr. Hardy . . . The check, representing RKO's purchase of Golden's movie, "Hitler's Children," was for $540,000.

Indicted Miners Attack Law Against Strikes as Invalid

By the Associated Press

Pittsburgh, Aug. 10.—Thirty coal miners, indicted two weeks ago for alleged violations of the Smith-Connally War Labor Disputes Act, today pleaded innocent and asked the charges be quashed on grounds the measure is unconstitutional.

The miners were indicted after a Federal grand jury investigation of insurgent strikes at Government-operated mines in southwestern Pennsylvania coal fields in June and July. It was the first Government action under the law.

Today's motions raising the constitutionality question came less than seven weeks after passage of the law over a presidential veto June 25.

Hearing To Be August 18

The motions were filed by the miners' counsel, former U. S. Representative Harry A. Estep, at the same time he entered the pleas for the men, many of whom are officers of United Mine Workers local unions.

Federal District Judge F. P. Schoonmaker immediately set August 18 for hearing on the motions.

The motions charged "that the War Labor Disputes Act is unconstitutional and void in that it violates the first amendment to the Constitution (freedom of speech)" and ". . . the thirteenth amendment to the Constitution (involuntary servitude) . . ."

"Illegal Operation"

The motions also charged that the coal mines were illegally operated by the Government, because "The authority to take possession and the executive order of the President was sanctioned neither by the Constitution of the United States, nor by any act of Congress and was, therefore, illegal and void."

The law applies only to strikes in industries operated by the Government.

Another of the allegations stated that among the violations of the act listed in the indictments was a count consisting of "urging the formation of picket lines" at mines. The motion asserted "the act specifically omits the term 'picket lines.'"

United States District Attorney Charles F. Uhl said if the motions are sustained the Government will appeal the case to the United States Circuit Court.

Trial of the miners has been scheduled to start September 1.

Editorial Writer Dies

Buffalo, N. Y., Aug. 10 (AP).—Frederick W. Kendall, 79, chief editorial writer for the Buffalo Courier-Express and a newspaperman for 63 years, died today. In 1884, he traveled the East with President Grover Cleveland during the latter's campaign tour.

Two D. C. Fliers Win Air Medal For Exploits in Pacific Area

Two Washington men, Capt. Wilton M. Fraser and First Lieut. Forest Preston, both of whom are serving in the South Pacific, have been awarded the Air Medal, the War Department announced yesterday. The awards were given for operational air flights "during which exposure to enemy fire was probable and expected."

FRASER

Captain Fraser, 22, son of Mr. and Mrs. George B. Fraser, 3831 McKinley st. nw., has been in the South Pacific area since October, 1942. A native Washingtonian, he is a graduate of Woodrow Wilson High School and was in his junior year at Massachusetts Institute of Technology when he enlisted in March, 1941.

Commissioned a second lieutenant at Turner Field, Ga., in October, 1941, he received his captaincy while serving overseas. A brother, George B. Fraser, jr., is a lieutenant (j. g.) in the Navy.

First Lieut. Forest Preston, 27, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Preston, 3505 Runnymeade pl. nw., also has been in the South Pacific area since October, 1942. A graduate of Pennsylvania State College, he was employed by the Hood Dairy Co. in Boston, Mass., and Providence, R. I., prior to entering the service.

PRESTON

He enlisted in October, 1941, and was commissioned a second lieutenant at Kelly Field, Tex., in July, 1942.

Dr. B. K. Good, Degree-Holding Elevator Operator, Dies at 58

Dr. Benjamin K. Good, 58, A. B., M. A. and Ph. D., elevator operator at the old House Office building, died last night at Providence Hospital as the result of a heart attack.

The former school teacher operated an elevator in the southwest corner of the building for the past six years. He formerly held a job as special examiner of executive papers in the Archives Department. He was appointed to the department in 1939.

Despite his many degrees, which he earned from the University of Texas in history and from West Tennessee State Teachers College in education, his life ended with a job which paid him but $145 a month yet gave him the opportunity of talking with the great and the near-great who used his elevator. Members of Congress were most friendly with him and often listened to his advice, his friends said yesterday.

Born in Union City, Tenn., Dr. Good taught school from 1906 to 1920 in West Tennessee. In 1921 he received a degree in education from West Tennessee State Teachers College.

He was head of the Austin, Tex., High School history department from 1924-29 after receiving preliminary academic degrees at the University of Texas and was granted the Ph. D. degree from the same school in 1932. He taught history at the University of Texas two years before coming to Washington.

Dr. Good had not been in good health, his Capitol friends recalled last night. He lived alone near the Hill and walked to work every day.

"Nitery Profile" Conclusion. Here, friends, is the windup of the night spot profiles started a week ago. They've been aimed at giving you a complete picture, not only of the entertainment, but the temperament and color of each place.

Riviera Lounge. Here's the playground of the younger element of the social register. They're not being so social this season, but when they can spare time from war work or are back in town on leave, you'll find 'em dancing to Pete Macias' music. Fine afternoon cocktail hour music by Roy Comfort.

Ruby Foo's. Chinese food that's nothing less than wonderful. The luxury dishes of old China and some new ones invented by Ruby Foo. Service is amazingly swift and dextrous. No music or dancing. Simply relax and make believe you're a mandarin or a mandarin's wife—and feast celestially.

Starlight Roof. The only roof garden in Washington for dancing and dining—and a beautiful place. It should be twins. Atop the Roger Smith Hotel it's always pleasantly cool. Music by the Myles Hallett orchestra is frothy and gay. The view over the city is entrancing.

Statler Hotel. Between its Embassy Room and cocktail lounge, the Statler looks like a set out of a Joan Crawford movie. So chi-chi that it's overpowering. Ted Straeter's orchestra plays in the Embassy Room for dinner and supper dancing. Cocktail hour music by Bob Knight's group.

Treasure Island. An alluring new place that's becoming more popular every night. The diversion setup is a triple-header, includes Rocco Terrone's music for dancing, Jack Allyn's splendid trio for dinner music, Lee Potter at the organ for interludes.

Troika is one of America's famous night clubs. People in San Francisco and Miami will talk to you about the wonderful party they had at the Troika in Washington. You'll constantly find Troika mentioned in magazines and novels. New York's top bistros bill their acts as "direct from Washington's Troika."

Victory Room. Here's the home of the big-name bands. Maria Kramer, owner of the Roosevelt and its Victory Room, has brought every big namer you can name, from Benny Goodman to Harry James, into the Victory Room. Tommy Reynolds and his orchestra are the current stars.

RALPH HAWKINS, bandleader at Crossroads and a prime Washington favorite

Willard Room. At one swoop the Willard Room dashed to the head of the class in downtown cocktail lounges when it was opened a few months ago. It's big enough to put a house in, dizzy with mirrors, always chock-a-block with celebrities and John Q. Publics.

THIS ISN'T ALL THE STORY. The "Nitery Profiles" concluded above are only the midsummer picture. In less than a month there'll be a flock of newcomers, including reopenings and spang new ventures.

The Balalaika, colorful and exotic, is due to reopen on September 1 with a new Russian revue. The Brown Derby will pop into the picture again, probably in about two weeks. And the superswank Cosmos Room of the Carlton Hotel will open earlier than usual.

New places will include Matt Windsor's new place on H Street and a couple of others on which our lips are temporarily padlocked. One downtown spot to be opened by Washington promoters promises to be sensationally beautiful. Another angle is that New York is moving in on us. Quantities of Manhattan dinero are due to be invested in our Boom Town niteries—and there'll be some changes made, to put it mildly. If you thought Washington night life was rolling fast last season—watch things pop this fall!

Mrs. Payne Rites Will Be Held at Her Home Today

Funeral services for Mrs. Mary I. Payne, 61, who died Sunday at her home, 800 Ingraham st. nw., will be held today at 2:30 p. m. at her residence. Burial will be in Cedar Hill Cemetery.

A native of Washington, Mrs. Payne had been employed by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing since 1917. She was a member of the Hope Chapter of the Eastern Star.

She is survived by her husband, Elliott Payne; a daughter, Mrs. Laura C. Diggs; a son, Sergt. Edward T. Payne, stationed at Camp Edwards, Mass.; a brother, Charles Dunn, and a sister, Mrs. Clara T. Steake, all of Washington.

Services Held For Mrs. Gray

Funeral services for Mrs. Lavania V. Gray, wife of Arthur T. Gray, who died Saturday at her home near Brookeville, Md., were held yesterday afternoon at the funeral home of Roy W. Barber in Laytonsville. The Rev. Conrad Jordan, pastor of the Methodist Church at Brookeville, officiated. Burial was in the cemetery at Laytonsville.

Mrs. Gray was a lifelong resident of Montgomery County. Besides her husband, she is survived by two sons, Clifford T. and Ralph R. Gray, both of Howard County, Md.; three sisters, Mrs. Nellie Gray of Potomac, Md.; Mrs. Katherine Virginia Gray of Virginia and Miss Alice Porter of Brookeville; two brothers, Albert Evely of Frederick County, Md., and George Evely of Baltimore, and 10 grandchildren.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Detroit, Aug. 10.—Well, it was a great gamble while it lasted. The Detroit Tigers are losing Dick Wakefield to the Army but the $52,000 they gave him for signing a contract wasn't exactly tossed away by the Detroit club. It was a pretty shrewd investment. All things considered.

POVICH

Rich Walter O. Briggs, who owns the Tigers, was regarded with some suspicion that he had gone daft when he peeled off the 52 grand for a boy who had never played a game of organized baseball. But in the five months Wakefield has been with the Tigers, he justified that price.

Wakefield made a first division club of Detroit. He's a sure-shot to be named the rookie of the year. In his freshman season he established the fact that he is the Tigers' best hitter. The only man who tops him in the American League averages is Luke Appling. On the day he was notified he was to be inducted. Wakefield was hitting a gaudy .325.

Until he is actually called up, Wakefield will remain with the Tigers. Induction delays may leave him with the team until mid-September. That may be time enough for him to secure the Tigers' first-division berth and possibly capture the battling championship for himself. The kid can hit.

He can run, too. The only outfielders in the American League who can outfoot him on a straightaway are George Case of the Nats and Thurmon Tucker of the White Sox. Wakefield's speed in getting to first base has added at least 10 points to his batting average this year. He has beaten out that many infield hits.

The Tigers may still cash in handsomely on the heavy dough they laid out for the tall boy. He's theirs after the war, and at his age (22) he does not figure to forfeit much of his baseball talent to military service. He could come back to the Tigers after the war ready to resume what started as one of baseball's most brilliant careers.

Wakefield might have figured with George Case and Wally Moses in the race for the base-stealing championship of the league had the Tigers desired it. He likes to run, but he doesn't steal bases for the same reason that Joe DiMaggio and Charley Keller, also fast men, rarely stole bases. Wakefield is on base with the Tigers' power behind him, meaning Pinky Higgins and Rudy York, and the percentages don't call for him to steal.

Besides, the Tigers don't want to risk injury to such a valuable chattel. Wakefield, you'll notice, slides into a base head first more often than any other player in the league. He doesn't go for the hook—slides or the feet—first plunges. There's a reason. "If I get banged up around the face or head going into a bag, I'm still in the ball game," he says, "but if I hurt my legs, I'm out of there."

Much has been made of Wakefield's facial and physical resemblance to Ted Williams. It helped him to wangle more money for signing a contract than any player ever received as a free agent. But the resemblance to Williams ends when Wakefield steps up to the plate. He gets that frequent hit like Williams, but not in the same manner.

Joe Cronin was talking about that the other day. Wakefield's batting stroke is nothing like Williams. Ted was a loose, wrist-hitter. He had beautiful power, more than Wakefield. He hit all kinds of pitching, high, low, inside and outside. He was a freak. Nobody figured to be that good a hitter.

"This Wakefield kid has a good stroke, too, but it's the orthodox batting stroke of the good hitters—the nice level swing. Anybody would like to own it, but that stroke has its limits. Wakefield beats out infield hits that Williams never could get. I'd like to have them both in my outfield. My third outfield could be a .142 hitter and I wouldn't complain."

Wakefield is a better outfielder, defensively, in his first year in the majors than Williams was at the end of three seasons. The solid opinion is that Wakefield will evolve into one of the finer defensive outfielders. His speed gets him across the ground and he has a strong pair of hands. He bothers Tiger Center Fielder Doc Cramer by covering too much territory, in fact. Cramer has to shoo him away. He wants to catch every ball hit to the outfield.

Laabs and McQuinn Hit for Circuit; Denny Galehouse Scatters 11 Hits

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, Aug. 10.—The Stumbling St. Louis Browns snapped to life today to overpower the New York Yankees, 10 to 2, after their star shortstop, Vernon Stephens, had been benched because of a batting slump and an ankle injury

The Brownies made 13 hits, including a pair of home runs by George McQuinn and Chet Laabs, each with one aboard. McQuinn's seventh of the season came in the first inning and Laabs' thirteenth highlighted a three-run fourth frame.

Enough for Borowy

They made five hits count for four runs in the fifth and shelled Hank Borowy off the mound, bringing Marvin Breuer onto the scene for his first appearance in an American League game this year. Breuer gave up the final St. Louis score in the eighth.

Mark Christman, who subbed for Stephens, hit a double and two singles.

Dennis Galehouse, going the distance on the mound for the Browns, was rapped for at least one hit in every inning and 11 altogether, but he kept the Yankees whitewashed till Bud Metheny opened the eighth with a home run. A double by Nick Etten produced another tally in the ninth.

Gordon Hurts Back

Adding to the Yankees' troubles as they opened their last Western swing of the season, Joe Gordon hurt his back when Don Gutteridge slid into him on a force play in the first inning and had to retire from the game at the start of the fifth. George Stirnweiss, who lost his shortstop job sometime ago to Frank Crosetti, replaced Gordon at second.

Vince Castino was the big gun for the Pale Hose, getting three for three for a perfect night. Edgar Smith held the Bostons to six hits, giving up only two safeties after the third inning.

Chicago hopped on Dick Newsome for six hits and slapped his successor, Mace Brown, for three.

Football Follows Full Day For Spears and Assistants

By Merrell W. Whittlesey
Post Staff Writer

Six dead tired football coaches, meaning Dr. Clarence W. Spears and his five aides, followed 50-odd football "candidates" of various sizes and shapes onto the University of Maryland's practice filed yesterday in the fading light of day and started a 90-minute session of gridiron fundamentals.

Yes, fundamentals. Not the intricacies of the T-formation, the Notre Dame style or the Spears special, but how to grip a football, how to pass and kick, the proper hold on a snap from center, the correct crouch of a guard or tackle and the duties of an end.

The boys are the football-minded youngsters of Maryland's more than 400 male students who answered Spears' call for help. The 700 Army trainees at College Park are not eligible and from the aforementioned group of boys in the ROTC, of Engineers, 4Fs, and others allowed to finish the semester, Spears must mold a machine to cope with West Virginia, VMI, Virginia, Lehigh and other Old Line rivals.

Only One Varsity Player

Of last night's turnout exactly one (count him) had played varsity football. That's Bill Helbock, understudy last year to Jack Wright, Shaugnessy's powerful fullback who gave Helbock little opportunity to show his wares. The New Rochelle (N. Y.) junior played prep ball at Bullis. Bob James, regular end last year and three-letter man, is expected, but has not yet put in an appearance.

From last year's freshman team Les Daly, an end, is the only carry-over although Fullback Bill Hickman, a Baltimore Poly gridman who entered Maryland at the close of the season is back. Hickman earned quite a reputation as a scholastic gridder.

The rest of the boys have no college football experience and only a few played scholastic football due to the State's outmoded system of scholastic athletics. Old Line fans remember Bill Guckeyson, who entered school as a soccer star from Bethesda and gained All-American mention but if there was a Guckeyson out last night he was in disguise.

"We'll just plug along like this for a few weeks," Spears said. "We don't know who's going to play, what schools we're going to play or where we're going to play but we're going to have a football team. Some kids might enter the fall term who will help out and we might find a diamond or two out there. Ive given up on Army trainees and will just have to hope for the best."

Start P. T. at 8:15 A. M.

The 7 o'clock football practice is just another outdoor session for Spears and his assistants: Tommy Fitzgibbons, former trainer at Toledo; Herman Ball, who discovered Tommy Mont as coach of Cumberland's Alleghany High School; Stan Baker, former New Jersey high school coach; Harry Rice of Iowa, and Fausto "Call Me Rube" Rubini of Wisconsin.

The six grid coaches and Burt Shipley, Terp basketball mentor, start out with physical training classes for students and soldiers at 8:15 a. m. and keep going all day long through calisthenics, the obstacle course, boxing, etc. Football comes last because candidates and coaches alike are too busy for football until twilight. Compare that with the prewar method of college football training.

Tiger Series Important To Nats' 2d Place Views

Bluege Fears Detroit Over Cleveland And Chicago; Leonard Hurls Tonight

By Shirley Povich
Post Staff Writer

Detroit, Aug. 10.—Manager Ossie Bluege is attaching some extra importance to the up-coming series between his Nats and the Tigers which commences with a twilight game tomorrow. He thinks the Tigers are the most serious threat to the Nats' hold on second place.

There isn't much to choose between the Tigers, White Sox and Indians in the league standings, what with only one-half a game separating those third, fourth and fifth-place clubs this morning, but it is the Tigers whom Bluege is viewing with the most alarm.

"They look like the team we've got to beat off," said Bluege, referring to the Tigers, "and this series would be a good time for us to mop up."

Bluege hasn't conceded the pennant to the Yankees despite that 8½-game lead, but he speaks very cautiously of the Nats in pennant terms. Despite the fact the Nats have won 9 of their last 11 games, they have gained only one full game on the Yanks during that period.

If you are in a mood to face the facts, though, here are a few: If the Yankees merely break even in their remaining 56 ball games of the season, then the Nats would need 37 victories in their last 50 games to win the pennant. Thats is no pretty picture.

Leonard Today

In an attempt to knock the Tigers out of the second place picture, Bluege is tossing his best pitching at the Detroit club in this series. Tomorrow in a twilght game he will trot out Dutch Leonard and his knuckler, and the following day it will probably be Mickey Haefner. Early Wynn will go Friday.

The Nats have suddenly gotten to be a pretty good ball club, incidentally. What was once a long list of batting slumpees is now comprised only of Shortstop Johnny Sullivan, and he is beginning to collect some hits, too. With Bob Johnson back in the outfield and Jake Early behind the plate, the Nats are presenting their strongest front of the season.

The paradox is that Gene Moore, the team's only .300 hitter is on the bench . . . Despite the fact that he was banging all types of pitching during Johnson's absence . . . Jake Powell, who is slated for outfield duty against left-handed pitching, faces long periods of idleness because there are dern few left-handed pitchers in the league . . . George Case, who finds himself in a battle with Wally Moses to retain his base-stealing title, may not make much headway in Detroit, where Catcher Paul Richards has thrown him out more times than any catcher in the league . . . Big Bill LeFebre, who joined the Nats from Minneapolis, will make his debut in a relief role before getting a starting job.

Paige Stops Grays 11 to 3 For Monarchs

The Kansas City Monarchs, led by Leroy (Scatchelfoot) Paige, defeated the Washington Homestead Grays, 11-3, before 20,000 last night at Griffith Stadium. Roy Partlow, who defeated Paige last year, was the Grays' starting pitcher, but lasted only one-third of an inning.

In this brief space he allowed five hits and four runs, sufficient to win the game. Paige allowed but two hits in the five innings he was on the mound, Vic Harris getting a Texas leaguer to his credit, and Josh Gibson getting a high and lucky bounder over Serrell's head.

Newt Allen collected the only extra-base hit of the game, a double in the third inning which scored Brown and O'Neil ahead of him. Partlow was succeeded on the mound by "Spoon" Carter, who lasted tow innings, allowing four hits and as many runs. Johnny Wright, in the last five innings, had the Monarchs fairly well under control.

Bill Myers to Take Over G. W. Athletic Director Job

William J. Myers, assistant professor of physical education at George Washington University for a decade, will add the duties of director of athletics to his multiple tasks in the athletic department effective next week.

John R. Busick, present director of athletics, a post he has held for the past two years since moving up as director of the publicity bureau at the university, reports Monday at Hollywood, Fla., as an ensign in the U. S. Navy.

BUSICK

Busick, who piloted the Colonial athletics through two trying years as a new member of the Southern Conference, was granted a military leave of absence and becomes the fifth member of the G. W. athletic staff to enter the Navy in the past two years. Lieut. Comdr. Max Farrington, athletic director, was the first, followed by Lieut. Comdr. Bill Reinhart, football and basketball coach; Chief Specialist Ray Hanken, assistant grid coach, and Lieut. (j.g.) Johnny Baker, head football coach.

Notified Months Ago

Although it is generally known that George Washington will not have a football team this season, the official announcement will not be made until the Southern Conference meeting August 20 and 21 in Richmond. George Washington's 1943 opponents were notified months ago of the school's withdrawal from intercollegiate football.

There is a possibility that the Southern Conference champions may floor a basketball team next season although evrey member of the championship squad has either been graduated or is serving in some branch of the armed forces. Court Coach Arthur Zahn, employed on a part-time basis on the G. W. athletic staff, will handle the Colonial courtmen if he too is not in the services.

Myers has handled various duties in the G. W. athletic department in addition to his physical education classes. He helped with the varsity football coaching and scouting, coached the frosh team two years ago and was coach of the G. W. golfers.

Myers played college football at Westminster, Mo., College. Myers and George Lentz, trainer and assistant physical education director, arethe only remaining members of the G. W. athletic department.

Brown Starts Training for Hart Bout Here

Alfred (Big Boy) Brown, 240-pound Detroit metal smelter, who meets 235-pound Al Hart, Army War College Negro soldier, at Griffith Stadium Monday night under the Joe Turner banner, yesterday established training quarters at Turner's Arena and went through ten rounds of hard work.

"Big Boy," cousin of Joe Louis, boxed two fast rounds with George Parks, local Negro heavyweight, who will also appear on the card; shadow-boxed three, punched the heavy bag three and skipped rope two rounds. Jack (The Reverend) Laken, business representative of Jackie Wilson and Angel Aviles, is also handling Brown and has hired Billy (El Kadir) Edwards, who trained Chalky Wright for his bout Monday with Aviles, to put "Big Boy" through his daily training routine.

Co-Medalists Lead Advance

By the Associated Press

Evanston, Ill., Aug. 10.—Kay Byrne and Catherine Fox, the brilliant par-busting comedalists of yesterday's qualifying round, scored first-round match-play victories in the women's Western amateur golf tournament today at the Evanston Golf Club.

Miss Byrne, of Rye, N..Y., blasted Mrs. F. W. Zimmerman of Chicago, 8 and 5, and Miss Fox, of Glen Ridge, N. J., was just as effective in eliminating another Chicagoan, Marian Schuster, 6 and 4.

Neither dropped a hole to her opponent.

Miss Byrne toured the 13 holes of her match in 1 under par, making her three under par for two days. Miss Fox, after a par 38 going out, was two over on the next five holes to stand even for her two efforts. Both held four-up leads at the turn of their matches today.

Shut Out Runs Fourth as Bolingbroke Wins Whitney Stakes

Princequillo Defeated in Nose Finish

Water Pearl 3d, Half Length Back, Shut Out Starts Despite Slow Track

By the Associated Press

Belmont Park, N. Y., Aug. 10.—Mrs. Payne Whitney's Shut Out, champion money gleaner of 1942 but an equine enigma this year, could do no better than fourth in the field of five that contested the mile and a quarter Whitney Stakes before 15,813 fans here today.

Townsend B. Martin's Bolingbroke, which occasionally pops up with a stakes score, took down the $7900 first prize in a nose finish with the Boone Hall Stable's Princequillo. The Hudson Valley Stable's Water Pearl was third, a half-length behind. Shut Out, which won the Wilson in his previous outing, lost the show by a length and a half.

Ran Smashing Race

Bolingbroke, fresh from a victory in a Class B handicap, ran a smashing race, covering the sloppy course in the fast time of 2:02. He returned $9.50.

There had been some conjecture as to whether Shut Out would start because he is known to be at his best on a fast track only. However, as the running time shows, horses run fast on this track even when it is not dry. Furthermore, this race, named after the Whitney family so famed in turf circles, is coveted by Shut Out's stable and, it being a weight-for-age event instead of a handicap, Shut Out had only to carry 117 pounds along with the winner and Boysy, while the younger Water Pearl and Princequillo got in at 103.

Shut Out Was 6 to 5

Shut Out has won only two of nine starts this season, and was no better than fourth in his losing races. He was a 6-to-5 choice today.

Water Pearl set the pace by about two lengths to the stretch, disposing of Boysy in short order. Shut Out went through between horses on the backstretch and seemed a real threat around the bend, forcing the pace. Then the sluggish starting Bolingbroke and Princequillo staged their stretch spurts and fought it out while the others faded.

Atley Donald Classified 4-F

St. Louis, Aug. 10 (AP).—Pitcher Atley Donald of the New York Yankeees was classified 4-F at his induction examination in New York yesterday and will rejoin the American League leaders here tomorrow, Road Secretary Rex Weyant announced today.

The Army did not disclose the reason for Donald's rejection, but he is known to have been troubled both by a defect in the vision of his left eye and by a spinal curvature. At times during his five-year career with the Yankees he has had to wear a back brace.

He has won three games and lost three this season.

Phillies Sign Fitz for 1944

Philadelphia, Aug. 10 (AP).—Fred Fitzsimmons, Bucky Harris' successor as manager of the Philadelphia Phillies, has signed a 1944 contract, Phillies' President William D. Cox announced today.

Coach Chuck Klein also has signed for next season, Cox said. Fitzsimmons, former Brooklyn Dodgers pitcher, was hired last month after Harris was dismissed.

Three Sons of Volomite Favored in Hambletonian

Harness Classic Moved From Goshen To Empire by War Travel Problems

By Orlo Robertson

Associated Press Sports Writer

New York, Aug. 10.—Shorn of its county fair atmosphere by wartime transportation problems, light harness horse racing brings its most famous race, the Hambletonian, to the metropolitan area for the first time tomorrow when 12 3-year-old trotters battle over Empire City's oval for $42,298.

Transferred from the picturesque Orange County capital of Goshen, its home since 1930, the eighteenth trotting classic is expected to draw 25,000 or more fans to the sprawling Westchester County track, reserved exclusively for the runners since 1915 after, originally, being built for the buggy-whip boys.

Although the locale has changed, the race itself will be the same. Heading the hand-picked field are three sons of Volomite who have dominated the pre-Hambletonian picture. Handling their reins will be three men, each of whom has been riding the sulkies for nearly 50 years and who have tasted the wine of Hambletonian victories one or more times.

All Bred in Kentucky

The big three, all bred in the Kentucky blue grass at the Walnut Hall Farm, are Volo Song, seeking to make it two straight for Bill Strang, Brooklyn warehouse owner; Phonograph, from the stable of James F. Burke of Plainfield, N. J., and Worthy Boy, who'll fly the silks of Mrs. James B. Johnson, jr., of Rochester, Mich.

If any but one of the trio takes the winner's share of $23,263.92 it'll be as big an upset as last year when Strang's The Ambassador led the field home. Ben White, 70 years old and with three previous Hambletonian winners to his credit, will be up behind Volo Song; Tom Berry, triumphant in 1930, will pilot Phonograph, and Sep Palin, better known as the driver of the great Greyhound, the 1935 winner, will drive Worthy Boy.

Volo Song, unbeaten in three starts this season after being crowned champion of the 1942 2-year-olds, is expected to rule the 3-to-2 choice. He'll be coupled in the betting with two more White-trained horses, W. N. Reynolds' Barbara Babcock and Gordon Gray, and for the first time it'll be father against son, for Gibson White will drive the diminutive Gordon Gray.

Phonograph, boasting of the year's best mark with a 2:02¾ clocking, and Worthy Boy probably will go postward at 3:15 p. m. Eastern war time, for the first of the two out of three heats, pretty near cosecond choices at 3 to 1. Phonograph will have Mrs. H. W. Nichols, jr.'s Mighty Margaret, of Laguna Beach, Calif., as a betting mate.

Just Out for Ride

The others appear to be out just for the ride—a ride that can prove profitable, since there are six money awards. But regardless, the ride does not figure to be a fast one since the track is in no condition to equal the Hambletonian winning mark of 2:01½, hung up by Shirley Hanover in 1937.

Rounding out the field are R. H. Johnston's The Nutcracker, who got in only after the other owners had approved of his late entry; Austin Hanover, the $15,000 buy from the C. H. Wilkinson estate; Lieut. Elbridge Gerry's Hester Hanover; Cleo A. Young's Dutchess Hanover; Aaron F. Williams' Darnley, and Frank A. Augsbury's Chucklyn.

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

$15,000 THREAT—Austin Hanover, purchased for $15,000 last spring, is expected to be a strong contender in the Hambletonian today at Empire City track.

Thunderbird Faces Leone Here Tonight

Chief Thunderbird, British Columbia Indian, gets a major test tonight at Turner's Arena, where he will wrestle Michele Leone, Boston villain, in the feature one-fall-to-a-finish match.

Thunderbird has been rolling along and has built up a good following since his return here some weeks ago after a four-year absence.

The Chief has to his credit victories over Babe Sharkey, huge Texan, and Abe Stein. Last week he was held to a draw by Big Ben Morgan.

Leone is known as a reckless wrestler. He created a sensation last winter when he carved out a "V for Victory" on his matted chest, swearing that he would not remove it until the Allies won the war. Leone last week drew with Johnny Long.

Sharkey also is on the card, facing Johnny Winthrop of Boston in the special added attraction.

Ahearn to Urge Title Recognition For Jimmy Bivins

Promoter Goldie Ahearn, of the Liberty Athletic Club, last night announced he would appear before the District of Columbia Boxing Commission Monday and petition that body to recommend to the National Boxing Association that Jimmy Bivins, hard-hitting Cleveland Negro, be recognized as the world duration heavyweight boxing champion.

Bivins, already recognized as the duration heavyweight champion by the New York Athletic Association as a result of victories over Lee Savold and Tami Mauriello, is to box Herbert Marshall, Brooklyn's durable Negro, over a scheduled 10-round route at Griffith Stadium a week from next Tuesday, August 24.

National Democrats to Avoid Taking Part in State Primaries

By the Associated Press

St. Paul, Aug. 10.—Frank Walker, U. S. Postmaster General and chairman of the Democratic National Committee, declared in an interview here today the Democratic National Committee will take no part in primaries within the various States, but it will support Democratic and liberal candidates "where there is evidence of unanimity of backing for such candidates."

Walker predicted the Republican Party will still be the minority party in Congress after the 1944 election.

Further, he said:

That the Democratic Party "has a finer understanding of the needs of the people than the minority party and the electorate will so decide."

That he is not concerned about reports of disaffection among Democrats of the South and he is "not worrying" about what will happen below the Mason-Dixon line.

That he will not talk about 1944 presidential campaign prospects.

That men in the armed forces undoubtedly will be afforded every possible chance to vote in the 1944 election, "no matter where they are located."

That he is firmly back of the personnel and work of the Democratic State Committee of Minnesota.

The Postmaster General who arrived here last night, said an arrangement, probably would be worked out whereby the Farmer-Labor Party in Minnesota could be combined with the Democratic Party, at least on questions of national candidates.

He conferred with Farmer-Labor leaders last night and with Minnesota Democrats, including county chairmen, this afternoon.

AFL Opposes Modification of Exclusion Act

Chicago, Aug. 10 (AP).—The American Federation of Labor executive council voted today to oppose modification of the Asiatic Exclusion Act to admit a quota of Chinese annually. President William Green announced the action.

Green told newsmen "the council decided to adhere to the traditional policy of opposing any modification or repeal of the Chinese Exclusion Act." He said he thought the interests of the country and the labor unions "would be best served by that position."

Referring to proposals in Congress to amend the act, Green said he thought the question should wait until after the war.

OWI Accused of Having Some Radio Personnel Fired

By the Associated Press

New York, Aug. 10.—Reports of how the Federal Communications Commission and the Office of War Information allegedly cooperated to influence hiring and firing of foreign language radio station personnel were read into the record of a congressional investigation of the FCC today.

The reports were written to the Office of Censorship by Robert K. Richards, who is that agency's executive assistant for broadcasting. They were read before a subcommittee of the Cox Congressional Committee.

In a report Richards quoted Sidney Spear, FCC attorney, as saying the FCC helped force removal of radio station personnel objected to by Lee Falk, head of the OWI's foreign language broadcast section. He also quoted Falk as asking censorship to notify him in advance of any plan to remove an individual from the air, so the OWI could recommend a successor.

Spear was quoted in Richards' report as saying that when Falk objected to a broadcaster he would tell the FCC, an when the station applied for a renewal the FCC would "tip off" Falk, who then would call upon the station manager and suggest that the employe be fired.

Then the manager would be given "some time to think this over," Richards further quoted Spear, and "after a couple of weeks he would begin to notice he was having some trouble getting his license renewed. . . . He would fire (the employe) and very shortly after this his license would be renewed."

Eugene L. Garey, general counsel to the Cox committee, told the subcommittee:

"If the radio can thus be controlled in August of 1943, there is nothing to prevent the same control from slanting our political news."

Previous witnesses had testified the office of censorship was the only governmental agency with legal power to remove objectionable broadcatsers.

Andre Luotto, owner of a radio advertising agency, testified that in February, 1942, he filed with the FCC an application for purchase of Station WOV, which he described as "the most important Italian language station in the United States." He said he withdrew the application after learning the FCC had on file "scurrilous and offensive" charges against him, although he had a son in the American Armed Forces and his life was "free from Fascist affiliation."

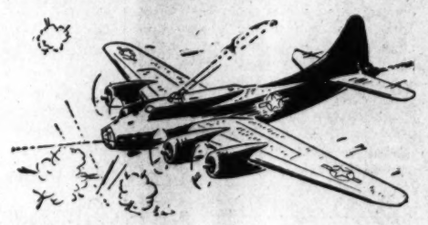
THE MONEY you won't have to pay

Four Harvester plants have been awarded the Army-Navy "E" for excellence. Two of these have also earned the White Star.

EVERYBODY KNOWS about the war output of America's industries. The guns and tanks in Africa, the bombers over Bremen, the warships roving the Pacific are there for all to see—and for our enemies to feel.



But there is another product of industry that can't be seen, though you will feel its effect in your pocketbook. The engineers and production men call it stepping up efficiency. Most other people would call it "savings."

Savings are what you get when you put experienced, competent production men on a new manufacturing job. Not at first, of course. Those first guns and shells and airplanes are expensive. But as the job runs on, the savings start to come. An engineer designs a new tool to reduce losses from spoiled work and to increase output. A foreman relocates machines in his department to save 2 cents on each piece in the handling of materials. An employe gets an idea and submits a suggestion for better production to his Labor-Management Production Drive Committee. All this, of course, while the quality of work is maintained or improved, for quality always comes first.

Small things? Yes. Small as so many drops of water. But when you put together thousands of drops of water, you get an ocean. And when you put together thousands of improvements and refinements in manufacturing, you get a saving to make anybody blink.

Consider the savings already made possible on three of the many war jobs the Harvester Company is doing—a 20-mm. aircraft cannon, an anti-tank gun carriage, and the Oerlikon anti-aircraft gun mount.

The price of the Oerlikon gun mount has been cut almost in half. The price of the anti-tank gun carriage has been reduced one-third. The original price of the 20-mm. cannon would buy two cannon now.

On those three jobs the reductions in price our Company has made to the government—which means to you who pay the government's bills—amount to more than $16,000,000. That is the difference between the original price and the price today. That is the savings, the money you will not have to pay.

These price reductions were voluntary. They stemmed from a pledge, made officially by this Company, that we would handle all war work at no more than a moderate profit, and that we would give the government the benefit of manufacturing savings by voluntarily reducing prices whenever possible. That pledge was made before there was any law regulating profits or prices on war production.

Further savings will be made on these jobs. And savings will be made on thousands of other jobs in the enormous war production program of American industry.

This program of making savings in production will go on because it is the very root of our industrial system. American industry has grown great because it has devoted itself to reducing costs, improving the quality, and increasing production. The process has given Americans better radios, and more of them. Better breakfast foods. Better soap. Better tractors and motor trucks and guns. And more of them. For less money. Those results flow inevitably from an industrial system which gives free play to the ideas and the energy of millions of alert individuals

The ability to improve, and to save at the same time, has benefited all Americans in the past. It pays rich dividends to America and our allies today. It holds the best and brightest promise for a secure future.

No Second Vacation?

Gettysburg, Pa.—They're telling this story at the Gettysburg Rationing Board office: An Adams County motorist came into the office and presented an application for permission to use his gasoline for a vacation trip. The application was refused. "That's all right," the motorist is quoted as saying. "I've already made the trip."

No shotgun shells are available, the Izaak Walton League informed him. The drought has dried up the berries and grapes they usually feed on. The sheriff is looking for a good scarecrow.

Plan Studied to Solve Per Diem Wage Disputes

A new plan is under consideration in Administration quarters to solve wage disputes among the 16,000 per diem employes of the Government Printing Office and the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. In short, it calls for placing these employes under the Classification Act. Civil Service would then have the responsibility for classifying the jobs and fixing the salaries. The proposal is reported to have powerful support both in Congress and among officials in the agencies involved. It would require the repeal of the Keiss Act which empowers the Public Printer to fix salaries for GPO per diem employes. A Treasury wage board fixes salaries for per diem workers of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

KLUTTZ

The present wage-fixing procedure, it's said, lends itself to a condition where some employes are forever mad at the boss. Morale is damaged and employes do things to spite the management such as loafing on the job and refusing to make charity donations. If Civil Service would take over, some officials believe, the employes would feel more kindly toward the management and Civil Service classifiers would be too far removed to be spited. They would be damned, however. That's the general practice throughout the Government, but no one would be hurt by it. No one knows, the commission might give a pay raise to the per diem employes at GPO that has been denied by both the Public Printer and the Joint Congressional Committee on Printing. A Bureau of Engraving case is now before the Treasury Wage Board.

The GPO wage case has been on the fire for nearly two years. The chances of a general pay raise are slim, indeed. However, spot increases have been made to small numbers of employes and Public Printer Giegengack was bitterly attacked for his "inconsistency" in a letter to Senator Walsh from Jean Hinton, president of the UFWA local. The letter charged that a few workers on a night shift had petitioned for a raise and he had granted the request. "These workers," the letter states, "are no more deserving of a raise in pay than their fellows." The action, however, shows beyond any further doubt that the Public Printer, while on record as opposed to a pay raise for his organized employes, is not opposed to pay raises as such.

Called 'Paternalistic'

"It seems that the Public Printer in good old-fashioned company union style is quite willing to be 'paternalistic' to his employes if they will approach him through unorganized channels and be willing to throw themselves on his mercy. . . . Mr. Giegengack's suggestion to the employes of the office is clear: desert your unions and their leadership and I will grant your requests for pay adjustments." GPO officials, of course, deny emphatically that they're fostering a company union which would be a moral violation of the Wagner Act. They say the employes involved had their salaries boosted to keep them in line with salaries paid similar employes by the War Department. Moreover, that salary changes are constantly made by the Public Printer. Nonetheless, the wage question appears far from settled.

Edward Rhetts is heading up the Balkan Division at OFEC, the new State Department Office of Foreign Economic Coordination. He formerly was with War Production Board and more recently an assistant to the Attorney General. . . . Dave Lloyd, formerly of Office of Price Administration, has been assigned to OFEC's Italian section. . . . Wayne Coy, assistant budget director, is taking an extended vacation. . . . Some of his own aides thought the speech of Food Czar Marvin Jones on the food outlook was far too rosy. They wonder if Jones has looked at military and foreign relief food requirements. . . . The people who have been promoting Vice President Wallace for food czar have now lost hope. They don't believe Wallace will take another administrative job while he's Vice President.

Army Air Forces is dickering to take over several hundred of the Army Service Force employes who'll be dismissed on August 31. Photographers are needed badly. Meantime, employes to be cut off will get their notices this weekend. Adjutant General's Office must make the largest cut—around 1200—and the pink slips will be passed out either Saturday or Monday. The employes will be given 15 working days notice which will carry them through August 31. Then they'll go on annual leave and when their leave runs out they'll be placed on leave without pay until September 27. By keeping them on the payroll until that date, the employes will have a much better chance to be transferred to other jobs; those who are transferred won't have a break in service, and their accumulated sick leave will be protected.

Civilian personnel at Fort Belvoir was ordered cut by 12 per cent as a result of the order of Lieut. Gen. Somervell to reduce employment by 105,000 by September 1.

D. C. Gives Water to Save War Gardens

Commissioners Back Plan to Irrigate Many District Acres

By Elwin Snouffer
Post Staff Writer

The District Commissioners yesterday moved to save approximately 55 acres of District victory gardens when they arranged for 1,200,000 gallons of water to be used within the next 10 days to remedy the effects of the current drought and also to supply OCD skid pumps, to be mounted on trucks, to pump water from the Anacostia River to irrigate gardens in the Anacostia flats.

J. Morton Franklin, supervisor of victory gardens in the District, announced that the irrigating would begin as soon as area chairmen could get together to perfect plans. He estimated it would be two or three days before the program would be in full swing, but said that possibly some gardens would be watered tonight.

The areas to be relieved are east of Rockcliff Park. They will include Crestwood, Sixteenth Street Highlands, Brightwood, Manor Park, Chillum Heights and Takoma, D. C. Franklin pointed out that only community gardens will be watered.

In the Anacostia flats area an unlimited amount of river water will be available, Franklin said. In this district are approximately 40 acres of gardens.

Manpower to work the pumps and hydrants will be drawn mostly from garden owners and auxiliary firemen. Supervision of the operation will be by members of the Fire Department.

Officials said that already sweet corn crops had been practically destroyed by the drought, with beans also suffering next. Tomatoes, Franklin said, would be affected in a lesser degree.

He estimated that it takes about 25,000 gallons of water to irrigate 1 acre of garden, and that the present allotment of filtered water would last 10 days. At the end of this period he had been assured additional supplies will be available.

Herbert Hoover Celebrates His 69th Birthday

Former President Herbert Clark Hoover celebrated his sixty-ninth birthday yesterday.

It was in a little Iowa farmhouse at West Branch that Hoover was born on August 10, 1874. Seven years later he was left an orphan when his mother died three years after his father. He moved to Oregon under the guardianship of an uncle in 1885.

The man who was to become one of the world's leading engineers and to feed starving millions during the last war, married Lou Henry in 1899 and left immediately for North China, where he was a mining expert.

He defeated former Gov. Alfred E. Smith of New York for the Presidency and became the thirty-first President on March 4, 1929. The electoral vote was 444 to 87.

Roosevelt Retort To Reporter Ends Bovingdon Feeler

President Roosevelt yesterday turned the tables on a reporter who asked him about the case of John Bovingdon, who recently was dismissed from the Office of Economic Warfare.

"Mr. President," the reporter said, "while you were in Canada, a man named John Bovingdon was fired from the Government service. Chairman Dies said he was a ballet dancer with Communist leanings. It has been suggested that you appoint a committee to pass on such cases. Any comment?"

The President asked the reporter why he didn't set up such a committee and let the White House have the names. He said he thought the reporter would do a very good job of it.

And that broke up the press-radio conference!

'Music of Americas' Finale Of Post Series Aug. 21-22

The Post Series of Starlight Concerts at Meridian Hill Park will reach a grand finale August 21 and 22 with a colorful concert of "Music of the Americas," consisting of a varied program by a group of outstanding musicians who would ordinarily appear in two separate concerts.

Beautiful Anna Kaskas, blond Metropolitan Opera star, will be guest artist, giving a program that in most cases would constitute a full, impressive recital. In addition, Mme. Olga Coelho, Brazilian soprano and guitarist, will bring the music of South America to the concert stage. Melodies of Latin America also will be played by the spirited Mexican guitarists and singers, the Charro Gil Trio.

Anna Kaskas is in her fifth consecutive season as a leading member of the Metropolitan Opera. Born in Connecticut of Lithuanian parents, this golden-haired young artist has built a distinguished name for herself in a short time on the concert stage. She has sung in New York and on tour with the Metropolitan.

Koussevitzky's Tribute

In addition to radio broadcasts and appearances with major orchestras, Miss Kaskas has sung with the philharmonic orchestras of New York, Boston, Cleveland, Kansas City, Grand Rapids and Denver.

Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, gave this evaluation of the opera singer: "She has a marvelous voice and great human intelligence. She sings with warmth and authority. Anna Kaskas knows how to produce tones with her throat, but has music in her head, too."

Steeped in the folk music of Brazil, Madame Coelho has won widespread acclaim through her radio and concert appearances in this country. The Brazilian government established a precedent in 1936 when it decreed Olga Coelho a representative exponent of its best in folk music and authorized her to promote the interest in Brazilian music in foreign countries.

Made World Tour

In 1939, she went to London, New Zealand, the Dutch Indies, Singapore and South Africa. She came to the United States a year ago and has presented her own programs over the Columbia network several times each week.

Special guests at the concert on Saturday night, August 21, will be employes of the Bureau of the Budget, the General Accounting Office and the Office of Inter-American Affairs. The following night workers of the Postoffice Department and the Office of Defense Transportation will attend as the guests of The Post.

Next Saturday and Sunday nights, Lotte Goslar, dance mime who has mastered the art of provoking laughter from her audiences, will provide two "evenings of fun" in The Post series of Starlight Concerts at Meridian Hill Park. Tickets to the Goslar performances and the "Music of the Americas" may be purchased at the Cappel Concert Bureau, 1340 G st. nw., and at the park boxoffice at 55 cents, $1.10 and $1.65.

Group Urges Conversion of Pickett Homes

Conversion of the Federally-constructed George Pickett Homes for 500 white families at Columbia Pike and Courthouse Road, Arlington, Va., to Negro use is urged in a report accepted by the Emergency Committee on Housing in Metropolitan Washington, it was announced yesterday.

The homes are about ready for occupancy and the first white families were expected to be moved in soon, it was reported.

The committee, not an official group, cites the fact there was a gain of 100,564 Negroes in this area to 1940 when 187,266 were reported, since 1900.

The committee officers are Mrs. Robert G. McGuire, chairman; the Rev. Arthur Gray, Plymouth Congregational Church, vice chairman; Dr. Howard H. Long, secretary-treasurer; Mrs. John Hunter, corresponding secretary, and Mrs. Pauline R. Coggs, executive secretary of the Washington Urban League.

The committee proposes as a relief to Negro congestion, that immediate steps be taken to require that the condemnation procedures exercised by public agencies for any purpose include fixed responsibility for relocation of displaced families.

The conditions of such relocation should require that provisions be made available in localities at least as desirable as the location of displacement in proximity to employment.

The third proposal is that public agencies responsible for programming and directly or indirectly financing public, semipublic, or private developments adopt the following policies: Forbid approval of sites which displace minority groups and do not rehouse members of that group; develop and encourage specific housing programs to provide adequate standard housing to meet the need of the several income groups in the Negro housing market of potential home purchasers and home renters.

It is proposed that the National Capital Park and Planning Commission exert its influence and authority to fully protect the living space of Negroes in the District of Columbia and it is also proposed that the National Housing Agency provide for the families occupying the trailer camps in Arlington by conversion of George Pickett Homes to Negro occupancy or the immediate development of permanent housing on suitable sites in Arlington County.

Organizations affiliated with the committee are the Washington Urban League, D. C. National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Arlington National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Phyllis Wheatley Y. W. C. A., 12th St. Y. M. C. A., Federation of Civic Associations, Federation of Parent-Teacher Associations, Barr Association and church and rest estate groups.

Flue Cured Tobacco Crop Estimate Hiked

A flue-cured tobacco crop of 795,074,000 pounds now is expected for this year by the Agriculture Department, as compared with an estimate of 771,490,000 pounds a month ago, but the total 1943 tobacco crop is expected to be almost identical in size with that of last year.

Though the prospective production of flue-cured tobacco increased during July, the prospects for burley, dark fired and dark air cured fell off slightly.

Building Firm Sues District For $150,685

The District of Columbia government was sued for $150,685.16 in District Court yesterday by the Ross Engineering Co., Inc., which charged that the money is still due from construction of the Stephen Elliott Kramer Junior High School.

The suit states that the school was contracted to be built for an estimated $948,859.94. Of this sum, however, a retained percentage of $94,885.99 has not been paid to the company, it is alleged. Other costs, said to be due to action of the Government, brought the total due to $150,685.16.

The company, which is located at 3308 14th st. nw., in its complaint avers that suspension of work because of War Production Board rulings on critical materials, linked with "lifting of suspensions, contradictory and conflicting orders, arbitrary rulings, indecision, procrastination and evasion" by agents of the local government had vastly increased cost of construction which the Government has failed to bear.

Concrete, $10,000; carpentry, $10,000; labor, $8612.50; steel, $5071.85; temporary heat, $4269.25; general insurance, $1000; changes ordered, $14,272.41; fire insurance for wood trusses, $1485, and smaller miscellaneous costs.

Contract for the school was signed on August 25, 1941. Work was completed on April 2, 1943.

City News In Brief

While his father was reporting at Camp Lee, Va., for active Army duty, Victor H. Ghent II, 2 months old, was found unconscious in his crib yesterday by his mother, Mrs. Dorothy Ghent, of 5223 Watson st. nw.

The baby, the couple's only child, was taken to Emergency Hospital, where Dr. Norman Panzer said death was due to asphyxiation. A certificate of accidental death was issued by Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald. The family was so distraught that further details could not be learned.

Hispanic Culture Grant

The Archive of Hispanic Culture, one of the Nation's principle centers for the study of Latin-American art, has received a $17,650 grant from the Rockefeller Foundation to be used within a 2-year period, Archibald MacLeish, librarian of Congress, announced yesterday.

The grant will enable the library to increase the Archive's collection of photographs and slides so that its records will represent a complete picture of the achievements of Latin American artists.

Driver Held In Traffic Fatality

Inquest Refers Motorist's Case To Grand Jury in Woman's Death

One man was exonerated and another held for grand jury action when a coroner's jury yesterday investigated two District traffic deaths.

As a result of the inquest into the killing of Mrs. Annie S. Litz, 50, of 112 Southern ave. se., who died at Casualty Hospital Monday, the operator of the car which struck her last Saturday will face grand jury action. He is LeRoy E. F. Toliver, Negro, 45, of 150 Rhode Island ave. nw., whose driving license had been suspended in November, 1941, because he was subject to fainting spells. The accident occurred at North Capitol st. and Florida ave. nw.

In the case of John Meinekheim, 79, of Falls Church, Va., who died at Emergency Hospital on August 2, the operator of the streetcar which struck him July 15 was free of responsibility by the coroner's jury. Meinekheim was injured when walking at Stop 13 on the Cabin John line.

The Department of Vehicles and Traffic reported that only one child had been killed in traffic accidents during the past nine months, while eight child fatalities had occurred during the same period last year. A total of 368 personal injuries involving children under 15 were reported for this year, while more than 500 occurred during the same period in 1941.

"This record would certainly seem to indicate that we are at last making progress in our efforts to protect children on the streets of Washington," commented William A. Van Duzer, director of traffic.

Ice Shortage Arouses Many Housewives

District health officials reported yesterday they were being deluged with complaints from householders, the majority of whom were elderly persons and those caring for small children, asserting they were undergoing real suffering because of Washington's current ice shortage.

As a result of the situation Acting Health Officer Daniel L. Seckinger called a second conference on the ice crisis. It will be held in the Municipal Center in Room 6143, at 2 p. m. today. In addition to representatives from the ice industry and hotel and restaurant agencies, Seckinger has invited members of the medical societies to attend the meeting.

The ice shortage, blamed on the current hot spell and the wartime population growth, has necessitated manufacturers rationing their customers as much as 60 per cent of normal needs.

Robert J. Wilson, executive secretary of the Washington Restaurant Association, yesterday proposed a six point program for the conservation of ice.

1. A thorough check on each ice delivery should be made and every pound conserved.
2. Have proper storage facilities.
3. Every ice bag should be emptied immediately upon receipt.
4. Inasmuch as ice bags are becoming almost impossible to obtain the utmost care should be taken in conserving them.
5. Do not leave ice in bags in kitchens or storage rooms.
6. Do not put ice in water when the water has already been cooled.

Most of the larger hotels reported they had facilities to manufacture approximately 80 per cent of the ice they needed. The other 20 per cent, they said, was becoming increasingly difficult to obtain.

Most restaurants, according to Wilson, have cut down on ice consumption as much as 33 per cent through taking strong precautionary measures.

By Howard L. Dutkin
Post Staff Writer

One man's meat is indeed another man's poison—especially if the second chap is a member of the D. C. Vegetarian Society.

This was brought out in no uncertain terms by members of the group to whom meat rationing is as important as an electric fan to an eskimo.

Thick juicy steaks dripping with crimson juice and butter? Phooiee! A rich rare roast of beef just the proper shade of pink? Double phooie! "We don't eat meat," the vegetarians declare with finality. Members use meat coupons to buy more butter then destroy the excess stamps.

Reasons for becoming vegetarians are as varied as the ingredients in the average hash. Some forego meat for "pesthetic" reasons, others because they are opposed to the slaughtering of animals. But all agree that they believe their health to be better because of a diet limited to vegetables, fruits, nuts and milk.

"Sure, meat is nourishing," admitted Dr. Reilly Moore, osteopathic physician, of the Stoneleigh Court Apartment, Connecticut ave. and L st. nw., where the society sometimes meets.

"On the other hand," he went on, "there are certain poisons in undigested meat that are absorbed by the body from the intestines. One is much better off for avoiding them."

Members bobbed their heads in agreement as the doctor spoke. They included Gertrude Silberman, 2701 Connecticut ave. nw., an employe of the War Production Board, who became a vegetarian 18 years ago for "ethical" reasons; Fritz Loenholdt, an OPA employe, who cut out meat 15 years ago and says he has not had a sick day since; Mrs. Harriet Mercer, 2448 20th st. nw.; Thomas Greville, 1714 34th st. nw., and William V. Mahomey, 34 Boyd ave., Takoma Park.

Officers of the organization are Milton A. Trenham, president; James P. Briggs, vice president; Thomas Greville, secretary, and Miss Silberman, treasurer.

Mason Warns Defense Rally Air Raid Peril Remains Real

If there is one suicidal air attack on Washington, we can get a second one and a third one, Commissioner Guy Mason told several hundred families of the Lincoln Park civilian defense area gathered last night for a mass rally.

He warned those gathered against the obsession of feeling too securely, pointing out that evening headlines showed the Germans to be just as tricky, the Japs just as brutal, and the Italians just as undependable as ever.

We must continue to prepare for enemy attack until the enemy cannot in any way muster an air force, he said, and added that part of this defense should be the schooling of ourselves to withstand such panic as has ensued in bombed cities and resulted in great loss of life. He advised citizens to "enroll now" for civilian defense.

Appeal for Volunteers

Porter M. Lumpkins, OCD executive officer, also issued an appeal for more volunteer defense workers. Others introduced to the assemblage were Army Sergt. Edward A. Griffith, former member of Lincoln Park's defense committee, now stationed in Norfolk, Va.; George E. Keneipp of OCD, and Joseph M. Essex, deputy air raid warden of the area.

The meeting was opened with a dramatic salute to the colors featuring uniformed pairs of men and women representing each of the four armed services, the auxiliary police, and the warden service. Music was provided by the Elks Club Band.

In accordance with OCD regulations requiring election of defense committee members by a mass community meeting, Grace Griffith, Mrs. Hugh Harstin, Raymond Poore and Joseph McQuade were named to assist Chairman Ernest N. Johnson, who already had been elected.

Bancroft School Rally

At a similar rally in the Bancroft School, Harmon E. Snoke was elected chairman of Mount Pleasant defense committee.

Raymond J. Bowen issued a call for wardens, fire guards, messengers, and emergency feeding and housing volunteers for that area, and numerous recruits were signed up.

The Mount Pleasant meeting was concluded with a demonstration of explosive incendiary, magnesium and oil incendiary bombs staged by W. G. Sweetman, member of national OCD's chemical warfare service.

Victory Sidelights

District Court Jury to Try Illegal Users of U. S. Uniforms

All persons charged with illegally wearing uniforms or insignia of United States officers will face indictment henceforth and trial by District Court jury, it was learned yesterday.

Previously those accused of the charge were tried in Municipal Court and the crime was considered as any other misdemeanor. Maximum sentence for the charge is six months in jail and a $250 fine.

The reason for the change, the United States Attorney's office said was that in wartime the charge is serious enough to demand a record of indictment and full weighing of the issues by the higher court.

Salvage Inspection

James E. Colliflower, general chairman of the District Salvage Committee, headed a group of local officials who inspected a display of the various phases of the "salvage-for-victory" program yesterday in the windows and lobby of the Washington Gas Light Co.

The windows illustrate the prepared tin cans, household waste fats; metal, rubber and rags; silk and nylon, and collapsible tin tube programs. One window shows an actual official salvage depot. Another feature of the display is a jalopy, a bale of steel and a 75-mm. howitzer in the lobby of the building.

Held in OPA Case

Jack Reubin and George Jacobson, co-owners of Larimer's, 1727 Connecticut ave. nw., posted $250 collateral at the Third Precinct Police Station for alleged violation of OPA price regulations yesterday.

Mrs. Elizabeth Clements, 1616 21st st. nw., declared that they overcharged her 19 cents a pound for meat.

Heads Volunteers

Mrs. John A. Hinckley of Warrenton, Va., has been appointed vice chairman of Red Cross Volunteer Special Services in charge of production in the District.

Mrs. Hinckley is the daughter of Mrs. Theodore Douglas Robinson and the late Mr. Robinson, former assistant secretary of the Navy under President Coolidge. Mrs. Robinson is a niece of President Roosevelt.

Unit to Study New Control Of Recreation

Park Golf Links, Bicycle, Boat and Swim Concessions Are Involved

A committee to consider possible operating of recreational activities by the Recreation Department which now are under lease and contract by private persons and organizations was appointed yesterday by the Recreation Board during its biweekly meeting.

Harry Wender was named chairman and Walter L. Fowler, Irving Root, and James Schwab, members.

Facilities which will be under survey are located on National Capital Parks grounds. They include golf courses at Rock Creek Park, Anacostia Park, and East Potomac Park, operated by Severine Leoffler who holds a contract from NCP until January 1. They also include various bicycle and boat concessions and six swimming pools operated by the Welfare and Recreational Association, several of which will be free from present contracts in 1947.

Christiansen's View

The pools are opened for free swimming and instruction in the mornings by the Recreation Department, but fees are charged in the afternoon by the association. The pools are Banneker and Francis, colored, and Anacostia, East Potomac, McKinley and Takoma, white.

Milo F. Christiansen, director of the Recreation Department, said he personally thought the department should take over full operation of these facilities, except perhaps those parts of them having to do with sale of food. He said he thought no taint of commercialism should enter into public recreational activities.

An extensive report on Negro play facilities in Region G, that area covering the congested Midcity section, was made by David A. Brown.

Mrs. Alice Hunter, secretary of the board, pointed out that more outdoor space and more staff were needed in most of the playgrounds. Mrs. Hunter suggested the use of New York ave. playground for colored children since comparatively few white children use it, and Christiansen said this might be done if figures indicated the justice of making the change. Mrs. Hunter also pointed out a need for 6 to 8 p. m. programs in the congested Midcity area where more tuberculosis and juvenile delinquency exist than elsewhere in Washington. She said colored adults and youngsters frequently break into the playgrounds after hours and use them until police make them leave.

Northeast Project

A recommendation for preliminary clearing of grounds at Northeast Recreation Center, 49th st. and Washington pl., was adopted, transferring $1000 to National Capital Parks for that purpose.

Needs for Negro recreation are great in that area and should not be left unfilled until after the war, Christiansen said. Irving Root, of NCP, said that upon clearing the space a softball area and a small children's playground could be put in operation at once.

Reporting on outdoor dances being held on tennis courts at Macfarland Junior High, Takoma Recreation Center, and Georgetown Girls Club, to meet "juvenile need," Mr. Christiansen said more than 800 danced at the Takoma party last Friday, and there were many 'teen age spectators in addition.

He said also that the 700 softball teams of three or four years ago had been so extended that 1220 organized juvenile and adult teams now play at least once a week—nearly 22,000 participating.

Field House Donated

The director was instructed to inquire into the water department's use of the best part of Georgetown Playground, 34th and Q sts. nw., for storage of civilian defense equipment and see if the materials could not be placed elsewhere, or if in any event they could not be so stored that part of the storage area could be returned to recreation use.

Acceptance of a construction shed for possible use as a field house on Garrison st. nw. opposite lot 3060 was voted by the board, James M. Schwab, board member, made the gift.

It was further voted that the superintendent inform Yetta Faber, organizer of the local Socialist Party, that it could not approve a request for use of a school building for a mixed meeting on interracial tolerance, September 7. It was said that the board could not approve the request because of the dual school administration which governs use of school facilities by the D. C. Recreation Board.

Mention was made of the various entertainments of servicemen and warworkers by the singer, Edith Dixon Sewall, and it was voted to send a letter of appreciation to Miss Sewall.

Female Pleas From Overseas

By Ruth Gregory

"We want underwear!" That's one of the most emphatic Christmas requests of all those voiced by the WACs, nurses and Red Cross girls we've heard from. Many of the women who sailed abroad a year ago, footlockers crammed with what they thought were long-term answers to the "undy" problem, are discovering that their calculations were way off.

Climatic conditions, laundry problems, strenuous activity—these things have combined to shorten the life of an undergarment. That's why women overseas want, and need, everything from slips and nightgowns to garter belt and girdles.

If you were to give your friend next door a girdle for Christmas, chances are she'd take it as an unsubtle commentary on her figure and you'd be minus a friend. Not so the ladies overseas. You have to be trim to wear a United States uniform and if nature didn't do it, a girdle will. It's more of a problem now than ever to the WACS, since girdles are no longer Government issue. (A problem gift, too, because they're hard to find, but keep your eyes on the counters from now until the end of the overseas mailing period—there'll be more coming.

Either of the two pantie girdles sketched would be a wise and welcome gift for your gal overseas. The one with the lace lastex sides comes in tearose in small, medium and large sizes, and is around $5. The other one, also in tearose, has power mesh sides, comes in sizes 27-30, and is about $3.50. Both of these are lightweight and easy to launder. (All rubber garters behind and fabric in the front.)

Nightgowns (pajamas too bulky and too much of a laundry problem) are much desired. This is one item in her wardrobe she'd like to have feminine—but without frills (remember she's probably doing her own washing).

The two gowns sketched are pretty much what she wants (if she happens to be in a warm place; Iceland is another story, calling for flannel or brushed rayon). They're both of rayon jersey, simply designed but pretty. The eyelet-trimmed one, sizes 32-38, is about $4, and the floral-patterned one is about $2.50 (same size range).

Tailored slips—again of washable, no-need-to-iron rayon jersey, they've asked for. Here's one in pink, they'd like to have, for about $2. Panties, too, they want. Although the stocks in most stores are very low, there'll be more coming in. The one sketched is a style generally favored. Send her half dozen of these (around 50 cents each) and she'll feel like a very wealthy woman

Now watch yourself. Maybe you do need some of these things yourself. But that WAC or nurse or Red Cross gal needs 'em worse.

Garter belts for girls who don't wear girdles but who want a bit of support around their midriffs, as well as to keep their stockings up, are other much wanted item. The white cotton lace one (24-30) is about $1.50. (An inch of real rubber in each garter.) For the gal who wants a little more assistance, the sturdier one (24-30) which comes in tearose with stays (they are removable) is the answer. It's about $2.50.

If you were to throw in an extra set of garters, you'd probably be chalked up as the most thoughtful person on this side of the world. We found a set of four, two elastic and two fabric, for about 30c. Many of the girls would like round garters. We couldn't find any; maybe you'll have better luck later.

Cotton brassieres are also in big demand. The one sketched (something over $1) is particularly good because it's strong for all its lightness, and because it's made in ABC sizes. Which means you order it in the regular size range, 32-40, but also according to your giftee's bust specifications: (A (small), B (medium), or C (large).

News of the Women's Clubs

By Genevieve Reynolds

Among the unsung, unheralded heroines of this war are members of the National Security Women's Corps. They are the unknown Mrs. Doakes, timid Miss Smiths and hard-working Miss Joneses.

GENEVIEVE REYNOLDS

By day they toil for their daily bread, pounding a typewriter or bending over heavy file stacks. After putting in a full day at the office they hurry out to go wherever they are needed—be it the District Morgue or the Ration Board. In short, these are working girls who sacrifice to aid the war effort. Theirs is not a glamorous task. Rather, they perform the routine, grinding jobs that all try to avoid.

Here in Washington the corps—it's a semimilitary organization made up of business girls and a few housewives—has 100 active members with approximately 50 or 100 inactive members. Sixty girls have done more than 2000 hours of war work from January to August 1. Mind you, this is in addition to the 48-hour week stretch in Government or business offices. Once a week the corps members meet in the armory at Central High School to drill. After marching and halting for several hours they sew for the Red Cross.

Some of the girls give their spare time to the Antiaircraft Service. They serve on eight-hour shifts every fifth night. Many work from 11 p. m. to 7 a. m., then dash a little cold water on their faces, grab a bite of breakfast and hurry to be at their offices at 8 or 9 o'clock. During the winter the members study nutrition, first-aid, air raid protection. Now many of the group are learning marksmanship at the National Rifle Association's range. Come fall, they expect to start courses in home nursing and resume the first-aid and nutrition classes.

Almost any night you can find members of the corps working with the Ration Boards at Georgetown Hospital, Children's Hospital, Library of Congress, OCD Office, Barney Neighborhood House, District Morgue, Juvenile Court, Municipal Court, various welfare societies. Also, many are blood donors. Still others are working at the USO centers, doing Red Cross surgical dressings, sewing and knitting.

Affiliated with the Office of Civilian Defense, members of the National Security Women's Corps, Inc., stand ready and willing to answer the call of duty. All work is voluntary.

As for personalities in the corps, you'll find Madeleine Carroll, Hollywood motion picture star, and Claire Booth Luce, writer and glamour girl in Congress. First Lieut. Ursula Crowley is head of the Washington unit.

A large delegation from the Nation's Capital, headed by Miss Marguerite Rawalt, president of the National Association of Women Lawyers, will be off soon to attend the organization's 44th annual meeting in Chicago. Scheduled for August 20 to 22, it precedes a meeting of the American Bar Association.

Washington women lawyers planning to attend the NAWL's meeting, besides Miss Rawalt, are Charlotte Milton, Helen W. Bloedorn, Mary Connally, Caroline Just, Nadine Gallagher, president of the Women's Bar Association of the District of Columbia; Julia B. Hopkins, Doris R. Williamson, Helen Goodner, Judge Marion Harrion of the U. S. Tax Court; Marion Toomey, Irene Kennedy and Beatrice Clephane.

This is the first meeting of the association since it was granted representation in the House of Delegates of the American Bar Association in March last. Upon her election Miss Rawalt set as the goal for 1943 "Representation in the House of Delegates of the American Bar Association." It was fitting, therefore, that the national executive board of the NAWL should choose her to be its first representative in the House of Delegates, thereby becoming the first woman to be formally seated as a member of that House.

The convention program will be high-lighted by addresses by members in war work. Miss Margaret Hickey, chairman of the woman's advisory committee of the War Manpower Commission, will speak at the annual dinner on the subject "Danger—Women at Work." At the Saturday luncheon, honoring Judge Florence E. Allen of the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit, and women judges and legislators, the presiding officer will be Mrs. Catherine Waugh McCulloch of Chicago, who has practiced law in Illinois for the past 56 years. The speakers will be Judge Sarah T. Hughes, of the 14th District Court of Dallas, Tex., and Hon. Gladys B. Stewart, of the Missouri Legislature.

Mrs. Fletcher Hobart arrived in Washington this morning, to be a guest at the Mayflower, while attending a meeting of the Women's Advisory Committee of the War Manpower Commission. The meeting has been called by the committee chairman, Miss Margaret A. Hickey, lawyer and business executive of St. Louis, Mo. In her present capacity, Mrs. Hobart serves as a member of the first wartime committee of American women to settle important policy with respect to the mobilization and utilization of women workers.

The Women's Advisory Committee is composed of 12 full-fledged members and two alternates. They represent management, labor and the general public. They come from the North, the South, the East, the Middlewest and the Far West. The committee, which is about to celebrate its first birthday, was appointed by War Manpower Commissioners Paul V. McNutt early in September, 1942.

Mrs. Hobart, former president of the American Legion Auxiliary, is well-known in Washington, where for three years (1929-32), she presided as president general of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

Memo to Miss Brown

SUBJECT:

Vaudeville Comes Back

Have you been wasting your sweet soprano on the shower curtain? Or allowing your best tap-dancing shoes to rust in the closet? Perhaps you've been hiding your light under a bushel, now that you're far away from home and high school variety shows. But no more!

Talent, small and large, is not only appreciated in Washington, but is at the moment being sought with vigor. The District of Columbia Recreation Department, cooperating with Recreation Service, has been sponsoring some tremendous volunteer camp shows in most of the Army camps hereabouts. Bob Hope is not the only one who keeps the boys in stitches . . . lots of Miss Browns have been doing it, too.

The shows are carefully made up to provide variety of entertainment and they're strictly favorite dishes of the servicemen nearby. You've probably heard that busloads of performers have been going off to Meade, Belvoir, and the like, for the last year to put on weekly (or oftener) shows for the boys. Perhaps you didn't realize that the performers are simple souls such as you and me who are blessed with an act.

If you and your two worst enemies can send out a solid trio, or if you alone can charm rabbits out of hats or trip a mean toe dance, the volunteer camp shows are literally waiting for you. Besides being a chance to show off your skill, it's in the best interests of military morale!

Auditions—which are the first step in joining the "circuit"—are held in a central place (a school auditorium, recreation center, or some such spot) every three or four weeks. The Department of Recreation has an accompanist who, they say, is so good as to need no music and practically no piano. So you, the star, must only arrive at the proper place at the proper time with your own ideas as to how to go about it.

Strenuous efforts are now under way to get performers lined up for this fall's shows (although a few shows are even now being given) so lose no time in calling Miss Bickle at ADams 2050 (the Department of Recreation) and arranging to meet up with the next audition.

If your talent should lean toward dramatics, get a group of like-minded ones together and whip a one-act play into shape. Ready-to-give acts are preferred, of course, although you'll get a good deal of practical staging advice from the show's director. So if you have a dramatic club among your activities or can get one started, you've an ideal spot to show off your thespian skill.

Instrumentalists are especially to be desired, too, to dust off that old boogie-woogie piano or off-beat oboe and get going.

Some of the shows have been such knock-outs at the camps that they have been repeated here in Washington at the Sylvan Theater. So, you see, you may be able to give your friends a treat.

You needn't be patriotically martyr-like about it all, either. Just because Betty Grable is far away in California doesn't mean that that the boys wouldn't go for a song and dance; nor that you wouldn't make a satisfactory substitute. And who wouldn't like a personally conducted tour of a camp, movie-star style?

Don't be shy, Miss Brown. Juts practice until perfection sets in and go off in a hurry for an audition. You may find yourself a small-scale star before you know it.

By Ida Jean Kain

Now that the season for shorts and swim suits is at its height, it is plain to be seen that what keeps most girls from qualifying as bathing beauties is the thigh measurement. The skinny mermaids have thighs that bow in, and the fat ones have thighs that bow out.

If you are thin, no doubt you despair of those ugly inner thigh hollows as being beyond your control. If you are on the buxom order, you probably expect a diet—when you get around to it—will fix all the bulges.

But what is needed in either case is exercise of a special kind. Since the weather is not conducive to activity, you will be relieved to know that the exercises are not particularly strenuous. If you will do your stint accurately, you can get along with a few minutes' workout every day. Here is a good set.

Lie on you back on the floor with knees flexed and soles of feet on floor close to hips. Very slowly and forcibly, separate knees in a V. Hold, draw knees together and separate again. Continue the exercise for 10 counts.

Then roll over on the side with the legs straight down, one leg on top of the other. Keep both knees straight and hold lower leg on floor as you raise top leg up and back. Return to starting position, relax and repeat. Ten counts for that side, then roll over and perform on the other side.

From that same position, raise top leg from the hip and make wide circles up in front and around in back. Do this 10 times with one leg, rest, and perform lying on other side. When you have finished you will want to relax completely for a couple of minutes before going on to the next exercises.

Stand up to do a chorus girl kick. You will do better by your thigh muscles if you begin by swinging the foot over a waste-basket or chair seats. After a while, you should be able to clear the top of a chairback.

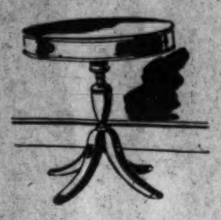
Small Tables Do Double Duty

By Martha Ellyn



Even though the drum table may suggest the reincarnation of the old, familiar center table, yet it brings additional beauty in its simple lines and gracefully curved legs, as well as further utility in the storage space provided by its drawers

A cup of hot coffee in one hand, a plate of food in the other and an inadequate lap for balancing it, may lead to embarrassment, if not a major catastrophe. The thoughtful hostess who provides the extra table from the "nest" is indeed a social benefactress

The commode type of end table is dainty and graceful in addition to providing the traditional space for lamps at the divan end or chair-side. It is surprising what the contents of the drawers will provide at a moment's notice

In the primitive home the only table was used for dining. But today the table has a wide range of uses and is made in countless attractive shapes and sizes, from the simple one-topper to the three-tier ones. Drop-leaf tables, those with single or multiple drawers, and others with a single shelf or several shelves, utilizing the space below the surface, all have a definite place in the home.

When the table first went to the living room it was a center or library table, which usually proved to be a "carry-all" for such items as books, fruit, lamp, mending basket and a host of other things.

No one ever has too many tables. And it is assuring to know that a goodly selection is still available in the furniture and department stores. Of all the peace-time furniture, the occasional table will be the last to disappear from the market because it is small and can be made from pieces of wood not suitable for war needs.

Space is at a premium in this war-crowded city. With many living quarters inadequate, a cabinet table with its extra storage space can be of great help. For instance, you can open up the leaves of a Pembroke table and there is plenty of room for card-playing and even for solo dining, in addition to serving as a surface for a reading lamp.

Your selection will be made easy because there is a table for every purpose and styles designed to harmonize with your decorating ensemble. If eighteenth century is your decorating scheme you will find many attractive mahogany tables. If you want maple ones, early American style, you will find those, too.

Today we present a few of the outstanding styles that you will find when you shop the local stores. Don't grab the first one that might possibly serve the purpose, but look around for the little gem that seemed to be especially designed for the particular spot where you will use it.

One spot where a table at your fingertips gives multiple service is by the bed or chaise longue. Here the telephone and directory, radio, reading lamp and reading matter are all within reach

Tier tables vary from two to five-deckers. They seem to have been particularly designed for placing choice objets d'art or prized figurines. The two-decker one can even carry a lamp, or a bouquet of flowers

The step table in utility combines the best features of the coffee table, lamp table, book rack as well as providing space for smokes, cool drinks and tidbits, according to your taste

A small dropleaf table has scores of uses. At a touch, the leaves increase the size of the surface to provide additional space for serving food, for cards and other games

Your Baby and Mine

By Myrtle Meyer Eldred

The child who, for some reason, is driven to incorrigibility tests the love and patience of the parent. And, yet, children come to know how their behavior frightens and upsets the parents and instead of inspiring them to better behavior it fills them with a delightful sense of their own power over them.

A reader wonders if I have any leaflets that would be of help to the parents of a willful child of 5. "He will not behave as other children do. He kicks, runs into children, threatens to kill them with knives if he can't have his own way. The parents can do nothing with him, talking is no good, as even the father admits. We all fear someone will get hurt badly some day."

This is another of those general questions on behavior which can only be answered generally. How many persons are trying to boss this child? Is it possible he only gets his way by running over people or uttering threats which may be as meaningless as are most threats?

If he is the victim of too much domination himself, he'll be driven to extremes to try to get his own way some of the time. If he is having a difficult time getting along with his small associates, he'll express his social failure and his unhappiness and disgust by being a bully, rather than to go on being completely unnoticed.

One can only reiterate that one has to build up a child to a belief in his essential goodness rather than his essential naughtiness. If he doubts people like him he won't be a better boy in an effort to woo their love, he'll be naughtier and naughtier, because it doesn't seem to matter.

Try telling him how nice he is, how much you can depend on him and try to see in whatever he does something admirable to be praised instead of just something more to be disapproved.

He may be physically in need of attention. He may need some stricter discipline that has meaning, when he acts in a way to arouse a parent to just indignation. But day by day children ought to be loved and approved rather than just pounced upon at each variation from right conduct so that life is just one long scolding.

Love and approval—even if it isn't always earned at the moment—will do more to make the patch of good conduct agreeable than all the punishment and scolding concocted for misbehavior. This seems like pussyfooting, but it is a harder course than just administering punishment and bewailing and worrying because it doesn't work.

As I said, without knowing anything about your boy, his environment and personality, this had to be just a general discussion, not a specific one.

Our leaflet, "Obedience and Punishment," may be had by sending a 3-cent stamped, self-addressed envelope with your request to Myrtle Meyer Eldred in care of this newspaper.

The Gentler Sex

By Malvina Lindsay

The Conversationalists

WOMAN WITH A VIEWPOINT—She speaks slowly in a throaty, authoritative voice and hands down pronouncements on the subject at hand with finality. Even a comment on the weather is a ceremony with her, and everyone feels that she has said something very profound. She never says, "I believe," or "I think," and most certainly not "Don't you think?" but comes out definitely with "It is," or "It is not." Impressed by her manner of speaking, her listeners accept her dictums unquestioningly until they get home and think them over. They also discover that a tete a tete with her leaves them singularly flat since she is not in the slightest interested in the pursuit of new ideas. Why should she be? She knows all the answers.

THE ME FIRSTER—She displays a marked lassitude in the conversation until she finds a loophole to bring her personal affairs to notice. Then she lights up like an illuminated neon bulb and is off on a long harangue about her personal grievances. "Let me tell you what happened to me!" is her theme song. She is also a hound for details and cannot relate the slightest occurrence without giving the life histories of those involved. Incidents relating to her children's illnesses and her husband's relatives are her specialty, though she also is well supplied with accounts of her troubles with rationing, shopping, help, and permanents. Anything so long as it is "me, me, me."

THE WOMAN WHO ISN'T THERE—Most of her associates think she is suffering from congenital boredom. A few of her intimates insist she really has an inferiority complex. Others say she is a snob; still others that she has a bad ear. At any rate, no one is ever sure of getting a reply to any remark made to her, so abstracted is she. Indeed after you have exerted yourself to an observation designed to interest her, she is quite likely to counter with a remark entirely unrelated to what you are babbling about. Strangely, however, her associates cultivate her in the hope of attracting her notice and thereby scoring a social triumph. However, those who have succeeded in drawing her out conversationally have nothing of any consequence to report.

THE PRIMA DONNA—As soon as she enters the room, the ether vibrates with her determination to get and hold the spotlight. You feel that she regards every other woman there as a potential enemy whom she is going to talk down if she has to produce a megaphone to do so. Fortunately for her she has either a voice trained for public speaking or one well pitched for carrying, and she is soon exuding personality, quips and well embellished remarks to a listening court. Since there are usually two or three of her in every gathering, the resulting marathon is lively entertainment for the genteel listeners on the sidelines.

THE DEBATER—She always interjects the most controversial subject of the day into the conversation, especially if she has just had a drink. Is always arguing with someone over something from Roosevelt and Willkie down to the best methods of combatting tomato worms. Feels strongly on politics, religion, etc. and believes a social gathering is exactly the place to say so. The more drinks she has, the more obdurate and pompous she becomes in argument, and the more eager to take on opponents. In fact, no one can make a simple remark without her beginning, "Now that's just where I don't agree with you!" As a result, everyone sits quiet as a mouse, or makes an excuse to go home early.

THE RACONTEUR — Considers herself a great asset to any party because of her fund of old and current jokes and anecdotes which she tells laboriously and in detail, and with which she prefaces, "Now of course I can't tell this as I heard it." Just as the gathering is sitting down to a stirring discussion of the underground movement in Germany or to an engrossing bit of gossip, she holds everything up by inquiring if anyone has ever heard the latest story about St. Peter or Roosevelt or the two Sicilians. No one bothers to say "yes." It wouldn't do any good.

THE CREATIVE CONVERSER—She has the rare gift of fusing her mind and her personality into a group, of getting the feel of those about her and of setting in operation among them currents of understanding. She has a sensitive awareness of others and not only listens receptively to what they say, but draws them out to give their best. She contributes of herself freely, honestly and with intellectual humility. Thus hers and other minds are quickened, strengthened and tuned to something greater than themselves, and know the high adventure of giving birth to those rare creations—ideas.

Dramatic Leader of Puerto Rico Returns

Luis Munoz Marin, President of Island's Senate, Completes Work on Report for Pres. Roosevelt

After flashing for three hectic weeks across the Capital's sweltering horizon, the dramatic, mercurial President of the Puerto Rican Senate, Luis Munoz Marin, has returned to his legislative duties in his home land.

Labeled a few years ago, "the Huey Long of Puerto Rico," Senor Munoz Marin is one of the most electric figures in the political history of his country. He has been here as a member of the committee appointed by President Roosevelt to study the changes in the organic act of Puerto Rico looking forward to an elective governor. The other three appointees from the islands were Martin Travieso, Celestino Iriarte and Jose Ramirez Santibanez. Secretary of the Interior Harold Ickes, chairmaned the group, whose continental membership included the Undersecretary of the Interior Abe Fortas, Governor Rexford G. Tugwell and Raymond A. McGowan.

Wife Is Muna Lee

Senor Munoz Marin is almost a cave-dweller, having spent a great part of his life in Washington. English is as natural to him as his native Spanish, and he holds a degree from Georgetown University. His wife, Miss Muna Lee, is a duration resident of the Capital, having left her position as head of the International Relations Department of the University of Puerto Rico for a post in the Division of Cultural Relations of the Department of State.

Their son, Luis, is enrolled at the University of Puerto Rico and their daughter, Munita, is making her home here with her mother.

A member of a well known Puerto Rican family, Senor Munoz Marin is head of his country's Popular Democratic Party. He was elected President of the Senate in the 1940 elections when his appeal to the people swept his party into power. Previously, he had been a Senator in the opposition.

His father, Luis Munoz Rivera, played a large part in the governing of his country under both Spanish and American control. Before 1898, he was Chief of Government which corresponds to Premier, and after the Spanish-American War, served in Washington as Puerto Rican Commissioner in the House of Representatives.

Elected By "Little People"

With the battlecry, "Free yourselves from a bought vote," this torch-carrying son of Puerto Rico's "George Washington" hit the headlines in this country during the turbulent elections of 1940. His platform was simple. Senor Munoz Marin appealed to the Jibaros—the hill people—to effect their own reconstruction through the uncorrupt ballot.

Decried as a rabble rouser, he rounded up his followers deep in the hills in a most unorthodox campaign "Why has no one done anything for you," he would shout. "Because you have sold your votes to them all. Their pieces of silver look good on election day. They will buy food for a little while. But you forget that the money you take for your vote has been given by someone. And when the legislators your bought votes have elected come to vote on laws that affect you, they will remember the men who paid for your votes."

And so, Senator Munoz Marin, elected by the "little people" of Puerto Rico, continues to fight their fight.

Lieut Grimes And Bride On Honeymoon

Recently returned from duty in the South Pacific area, and even more recently a bridegroom, Lieut. (j. g.) Alton Barger Grimes, USN, and his bride, the former Miss Virginia Mae Stewart, are now on a wedding trip.

Their marriage took place Saturday at 3 p. m. in the St. Andrew Chapel of the Naval Academy with the Rev. William N. Thomas, U. S. Naval chaplain, officiating.

The bride, who is the daughter of Mr and Mrs. Walter Stewart Brewer of Annapolis, was given in marriage by her father. She wore an ivory satin frock, styled on princess lines with a marquisette yoke and a full court train. Her fingertip veil of bridal illusion was fashioned with a tiara of seed pearls and she carried a shower bouquet of rosebuds and baby's breath around a purple orchid.

Miss Evelyn Brewer was her sister's maid of honor, wearing a pink chiffon frock and carrying a bouquet of pink rosebuds and blue delphinium. Capt. Alphonso L. Barger, U. S. Army, of Washington, was best man for his nephew, and ushers were Midshipmen Mason D. Milliken, Thomas H. Lyons, William R. Chester and J. Thomas McMenimin.

Following the wedding, there was a reception at the home of the bride's parents.

Gen. Hsiung Given New Post

Chungking, Aug. 10 (AP).—Gen. Hsiung Shih-hui, recalled head of the Chinese Military Mission to the United States, has been appointed secretary general of the central planning board handling wartime and postwar reconstruction in China, it was announced today.

The announcement was interpreted as a final indication that General Hsiung would not return to the United States. At the time of his recall from Washington earlier this year a spokesman for the National Military Council said the general would return to the United States after making a report to the Chinese government.

General Hsiung succeeded Dr. Wang Shih-chieh, who was said to have resigned because of the "pressure of other duties."

Notables Plan Visits To Capital

Still they come, and plan to come—distinguished visitors to Washington from South America. And already approaching the crowded stage is the official calendar of events for several of them.

Scheduled to arrive next week is the Brazilian Minister of War, Gen. Eurico Gaspar Dutra who, you can be sure, will be entertained at a continuous round of luncheons, dinners and receptions during his Washington sojourn. With him will be Gen. Claude M. Adams, United States Military Attache at Rio de Janeiro, and four aides. General Dutra expects to be in this country about a month but will spend only a week in Washington.

About a month after General Dutra gets here, a distinguished Chilean will arrive. He is Chile's Foreign Minister, Joaquin Fernandez, who has already left his homeland and is now on the first part of a trip that will take in Argentina, Paraguay, Uruguay, Venezuela, Colombia, Ecuador and Peru, as well as the United States.

Now heading to Washington is Herman B. Baruch, head of the Board of Economic Warfare in Rio de Janeiro, who is coming here to confer with officials regarding further work of the board there. Accompanying him is Maj. Benjamin Namm, head of the United States Purchasing Commission, and W. S. McCashen, assistant head of the Rubber Development Corporation in Brazil.

Vargases to Leave For Ocean City

Packing away those last vacation togs are the Counselor of the Colombian Embassy and Senora de Vargas, who will leave tomorrow for Ocean City, N. J.

They plan to spend a month at the popular seaside resort, accompanied by their daughter, Blanca. Blanca has become an expert on canning and farming during the last few weeks. She has just returned from a month's stay at the Raymond Dodson's Farm in southern Maryland, where she helped with the food-raising chores.

Swedish Counselor To Leave for Mexico

Axel de Wastfelt of Legation Staff Is Among Those Receiving Promotions

From the foreign office in Sweden, Herbert de Ribbing, Counselor of the Swedish Legation in Washington, has received word of his promotion to the rank of minister, and with it news of his transfer to serve as Minister to Mexico City.

Mr. and Mme. de Ribbing have many friends here who will be sorry to see them go. They have been here little more than a year, have been living in a pleasant house in Spring Valley with their three children, Katarina, who is 12; Marina aged 9, and young Bo, their only son, 5. As plans are now they expect to go some time in October. Mr. de Ribbing will succeed Rolf Arfwedson, who has been serving as Charge d'Affaires of Sweden in Mexico and will go to Bogota, Colombia in the same capacity.

First Served at Paris Legation

Mr. de Ribbing began his career in the foreign service of his country more than a score of years ago. Appointed attache, he served first at the Swedish Legation in Paris. That was in 1922. Then he went to London as attache and was promoted to Second and First Secretaries while serving in the British capital. Home again in 1929, his next assignment was in the Baltic states, but for a very brief period. Transferred to Helsinki, he went to Finland as First Secretary and after several years there again returned to Sweden. He was promoted to the rank of Counselor in 1934 while with the Foreign Office and was sent to Paris in 1938 with that rank. Then following another tour of duty at the Foreign Office he came to Washington in May, 1942.

New Post at Swedish Legation

A number of other changes are being made in the legation staff line-up.

A new addition to the staff will be Prof. Gunnar Myrdal, prominent economist who is slated to be economic counselor of the legation, a newly created post. Friends of Carl Axel de Wastfelt, Second Secretary of the legation, are congratulating him on his raise in rank to that of First Secretary, and congratulations are also due to Per Rickard Hichens Bergstrom, now Attache of the legation, who has been promoted to Second Secretary.

When Carl Axel Wastfelt began his career in diplomacy his first assignment was in 1935 as Attache to the General Consulate in New York. He came to Washington from New York in 1937 as Attache of the legation and then the Foreign Office called him home the following year. There he served as Secretary to the Foreign Minister. When time came for an assignment abroad he was again sent to Washington—that was in October, 1940, where he has since been serving as Second Secretary.

Has Been in U. S. Five Years

Most of Per Bergstrom's career in the foreign service of his country has been spent in the United States. Beginning in 1938 Mr. Bergstrom was appointed Attache to the Consulate in San Francisco, now the Consulate General, where he spent the two years before coming to Washington in 1940 as Attache.

Reinhold de Reutersward who has been serving as attache here will be saying goodby before long and taking off for Minneapolis where he has been named Vice Consul.

Mrs. Spruks Leaving Soon For Florida

The days are skipping by quickly for Mrs. Charles Spruks, who is busy packing up to leave the end of August to join Mr. Spruks in Miami, Fla.

Mr. Spruks, ceremonial officer of the Department of State, recently was transferred to Florida for an indefinite period, where it will be his pleasant duty to greet all visiting dignitaries arriving in this country from South America and other points by way of the southern route. When he left several weeks ago his young son, Henry, accompanied him. And when Mrs. Spruks leaves she will take along her daughter, Jean, aged 9.

Mr. Spruks has found a charming house for his family on one of the small islands off Miami Beach, the address being 440 East Rivo Alta Drive, Rivo Alta Island, Miami Beach. In the meantime Mrs. Spruks has sold her equally attractive home on Volta Place.

All ties with Washington, however, will not be severed for this popular couple. Mrs. Spurks not long ago became interested in photographic work and has been with a Washington studio. She proposes to open a branch of her studio in Miami Beach, which will necessitate frequent trips up to Washington, much to the delight of her friends here.

Miss Harris Returns

Miss Aileen Havlin Harris has returned to the Capital from a month's visit in the Southwest. Miss Harris, who commutes in and out of Washington to far-flung points, will probably be off again soon. Critical Stage Of Normandie Salvage Over

By the Associated Press

New York, Aug. 10.—The tilt of the former French liner Normandie was reduced to 40.8 degrees today, and Secretary of the Navy Frank M. Knox in a congratulatory telegram declared the critical stage of the salvage operation "is safely past."

Capt. Bernard E. Manseau, Navy's supervisor of salvage, estimated there were 100,000 tons of water in the giant hull when pumping operations began many days ago, and that 30,000 tons still remained.

Capt. John J. Tooker, in charge of the salvage operation, said "we should be able to completely unwater the vessel within two days provided we can treat the minor leaks and adjust our pumps satisfactorily."

Structural Changes

When all the water is removed, the ship, renamed the U. S. S. Lafayette after it was taken over from the French, is expected still to lean over at a 30-degree angle until certain structural changes are made, Captain Tooker said.

Captain Manseau said that when the 37-degree angle was reached pumping operations would be halted temporarily until workmen could remove 150 tons of patches and concrete fillings from the port side of the 79,000-ton ship.

Stern Fully Afloat

The stern was reported completely afloat, but Captain Tooker said about a third of the bow was resting in Hudson River mud. Meanwhile, he said, steam winches with the power of about 48 tugboats have been pulling the great hull slowly toward a desired position between Piers 88 and 90, and "we've pulled her over 12 feet already."

Since it burned and capsized 18 months ago, the former French liner lay in its watery berth at an angle of 79 degrees. Captain Tooker said the salvage operation was expected originally to take 20 months, but "we are about five months ahead of schedule."

The craft is expected to be put into service as a transport in 11 months.

Storm Stifled Oakes' Outcry, Witness Says

By the Associated Press

Nassau, Bahamas, Aug. 10.—Sir Harry Oakes may have been bludgeoned and burned to death last month while a fierce rainstorm beat down upon his ocean-side villa, Westbourne, and the crash of thunder and roar of the wind drowned out any outcries or sounds of scuffling.

Harold G. Christie, who spent the night of July 7-8 in a bedroom adjoining that of the 68-year-old multimillionaire, testified today that the noise of the terrific storm awakened him, but he told of hearing no sounds at any time to indicate that his host was being attacked.

Refused Piece of Land

He went back to sleep, related the real estate operator, and did not awaken again until daylight, when he went to arouse Oakes for breakfast and discovered the still-warm body on a charred bed.

Christie was the principal witness at the resumption of a preliminary hearing for Oakes' son-in-law, debonair Alfred de Marigny, who is charged with murder.

Under questioning by Special Prosecutor Alfred F. Adderley and Defense Attorney Godfrey Higgs, Christie recalled De Marigny's marriage to Oakes' eldest daughter, Nancy, then 18 years old.

"De Marigny told me recently that he wanted a piece of land, but Harry refused to give it to him," Christie declared.

"De Marigny stated that he and Sir Harry were not on friendly terms.

Treatment of Former Wife

"De Marigny said Harry told him that he had not treated his former wife, Ruth, with due consideration."

Christie said de Marigny told of being annoyed with Oakes because the ageing baronet would not listen to his side of the question.

"The last time de Marigny discussed Harry with me was a week or two before his death," the witness said. "He said Oakes treated him unfairly and was unduly severe."

Christie said de Marigny asked him to sell a Nassau lot because he had expenses he wanted to meet.

The preliminary hearing was recessed until Thursday, at which time Maj. Herbert Pemberton of the Nassau police probably will testify.

Lewis Maps UMC Control Of Coal By-Products Jobs

By Ben W. Gilbert
Post Staff Writer

Envisaging a vast potential labor empire in the expanding coal by-products field, John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers, has determined not to relinquish his right to organize in those fields whether the American Federation of Labor readmits the United Mine Workers or not, it was learned yesterday.

The extent to which Lewis would permit the liquidation of the UMA's catch-all District 50 has become one of the main factors blocking the immediate readmission of the miners to the federation.

District 50 has been organizing in the by-products field, including war-expanded plastics and chemicals. Recent testimony by Interior Department experts before congressional committees has indicated prospects for development of a major industry to make gasoline from coal in the event of serious depletion of our oil reserves.

Vast Job Reservoir

Such a development would provide additional employment for coal miners as well as by-products workers. One witness estimated that the coal by-products industry might be employing eight million additional workers after the war.

In addition to by-products, District 50 has acquired a miscellaneous collection of building-trades workers, railroad workers, dairy farmers, mechanics, etc. It is believed the miners would have no objection to the transfer of these groups to other AFL unions in return for control of the by-products field.

Opposition to readmission of the miners was expressed at the AFL executive board meeting in Chicago by Lloyd Thrush, head of the federation's Progressive Miners. Opposition from this quarter is not regarded as a serious threat to Lewis' application.

Tobin Stays "Neutral"

More important may be the announcement by AFL Vice President Daniel J. Tobin, head of the powerful Teamsters Union and a close friend of President Roosevelt, that he planned to make no recommendation to the council.

Tobin is chairman of a special committee of the council appointed ot investigate the Lewis application.

There were indications that the whole question might be referred to the AFL convention in October for final action.

Thrush led a delegation of Progressives who went before the council to insist upon their constitutional right to veto a separate mine charter to Lewis.

In Washington conferences with Lewis, the Tobin committee requested a bill of particulars on the makeup of District 50, but Lewis declined to produce the information, agreeing only to accept the federation "as it is" in return for a commitment from the federation to accept the United Mine Workers "as it is."

The federation position has always been to limit the jurisdiction of an applicant before it is admitted, rather than to admit the applicant first, and then adjust jurisdictional questions later.

UMW officials have charged that the question has become intertwined with questions of national politics. A turndown by the federation undoubtedly would be attributed by the miners to "political" interference from President Roosevelt.

OPA Liquor Rules Befuddle Liquor Trade

By Bert Kemmerer
Post Staff Writer

There are more headaches in trying to interpret the new OPA price regulations to control and reduce the retail cost of liquor and wine than there ever was in a brimming gourdful of "moonshine."

An OPA official who, not necessarily through bashfulness, prefers to remain anonymous, said yesterday that it would take a detail of 200 men two weeks to arrive at any definite figure at what and where price reductions would be—if any.

A review of recent headlines and stories relative to this vital question revealed:

(a) "Washington retail liquor prices will be reduced at least 10 per cent.

"(b) Liquor prices in Washington will be cut from 10 to 30 per cent.

"(c) Substantial reduction of wine and liquor prices should follow."

Confusion Reigns

A bit confusing you'll say, but wait until you see the reporter's privately conducted survey in order to clarify the situation for the serious drinker. The result:

1. All the wholesale liquor dealers in Washington were taking their information from A, B and C, listed above.

2. Most of the retail dealers in Washington were on a vacation or hadn't come back from the air-raid shelters yet.

3. The Alcoholic Beverage Commission was calling on the OPA for an interpretation of the new ruling.

However, two representative retail dealers are quoted herewith: The Hub Liquor Store, 1347 E st. nw.; H. A. Curtis, "I don't know a blooming thing about the regulation." Press Liquors, Inc., 527 Fourteenth st. nw., W. S. Kalil, "Some prices will go up, some will go down."

OPA Explanation Desired

And to further clarify the situation Harry C. Wechsler, president of the District Retail Liquor Dealers Association, said that he would call a dealers' meeting shortly to have an OPA official explain the price reduction.

No one was available to state the viewpoint of the United Distillers of America on the rollback.

A regulation establishing flat prices at the distillery level for new brands of liquor which is yet to be issued by the OPA should be the real explanation of how the rollback is to work.

These maximums will be based on age, proof and formula of spirits and whisky. Brands on the market prior to March, 1942, will continue to be priced under the general maximum price regulation at the distillery level. These maximums are the top prices then charged plus additional taxes.

Regulation of New Brands

New regulations are expected to deal more satisfactorily with "off" brands of liquor which have caused much confusion in the price of standard brands, which disappear from the market and are succeeded by the new brands offered as substitutes at boom prices.

Weschler said that bars selling by the drink would not be affected as much as package dealers. He explained that lower retail prices should bring about a reduction in the bar charges by the drink.

However it is all very elementary as pointed out by the president of the District Liquor Dealers Association, that quotas to local dealers must be increased or the prices will go up.

Court Backs Two Husbands In Draft Case

By the Associated Press

Baltimore, Aug. 10.—Federal Judge W. Calvin Chesnut said today he was prepared to find that two married Pocomoke City men who have petitioned for release from the armed services on grounds that they were inducted while single eligible men of their board were still available, were inducted improperly.

His statement came from the bench at the conclusion of the second day of testimony in the habeas corpus proceedings instituted by the two men—Stanley Gilmer Baylay, 37, and Roland Frank Bevans, 36. Final arguments will be heard tomorrow.

The judge also criticized the contention of Government attorneys that married men who have been given stays of induction which have expired should be placed at the top of the list, and called for induction by their draft boards before eligible single men.

Shortly before the conclusion of today's testimony, the three members of the Worcester County Draft Board said they had placed the two men on the top of the list for the July quota of 22 men because the 60-day deferments given the petitioners had expired.

Charles H. Meiser, chairman, testified the board made no effort first to ascertain whether there were enough single men to fill the quota because the board felt that Bayly and Bevans had been out on "borrowed time."

Judge Chesnut said he thought it "would help the Government and Selective Service to select men on the basis of their status at the time of induction" rather than to apply an "arbitrary rule," which placed men at the top of the list when their deferment expired.

Earlier in the day, Paul M. Rhodes, a Worcester board member, said flatly the board did not agree with the regulation calling for a delay in the induction of married men until available single men were called.

Ration Tokens Due By Billions Jan. 1 As Stamp 'Change'

Billions of quarter and nickel-size plastic or glass tokens will be put into circulation after January 1 by the Office of Price Administration to supplement ration book stamps as a new ration currency.

The tokens will be used to provide change for ration stamps of higher denominations, thus simplifying the job of buying rationed foods—canned goods and meats. The quarter-size token will be worth 5 points; the nickel size, 1 point.

Grocers would receive the tokens through the banks where they now deposit their ration stamps under the ration banking plan. They would be put into circulation by the grocers.

The program cannot go into effect before January 1 because of the manufacturing problems involved in providing the tokens, it was explained.

Mrs. Hopkins Funeral Rites Observed Here

Funeral services for Mrs. Ruth Turner Hopkins, 46, of 2611 Otis st. ne., who died Monday at Garfield Hospital, were held last night at Hysong's funeral home, 1300 N st. nw. Burial will be tomorrow afternoon in Parkersburg, W. Va.

She is survived by her husband, Leon Earl Hopkins, and a son, Leon E. Hopkins, jr., both of Washington; a brother, Joseph Earl Turner, and two sisters, Mrs. Edith Bell and Jane Turner, all of Parkersburg, W. Va.

Oil Price Rise Plan Is 'Steal,' Says Labor Unit

Secretary of Interior Harold L. Ickes and the oil industry were linked yesterday as participating in a "pressure" campaign to put over a billion and quarter dollar "steal" by the Office of Price Administration labor policy committee.

The three-man committee representing the AFL, CIO and railroad brotherhoods charged that consumers would pay that much additional each year if a proposed 35 cents a barrel increase in the price of crude oil which Ickes has indorsed is approved by OPA Administrator Prentiss M. Brown. The committee said consumers would have to pay a half billion dollars in direct costs and three-quarters of a billion in indirect costs, if the increase which it termed a "price gouge" went through

Blow to "Stabilization"

"Such an increase has no justification," the committee said. "It would be a serious blow to the economic stabilization program and violate the Presidents' 'hold the line' order. It would set in motion a flood tide of other demands for price adjustments and open wider the gates to inflation."

The committee challenged Ickes' assertion that present ceiling prices were holding back output and called attention to National City Bank figures showing oil company profits for the first six months of this year about 20 per cent ahead of last year.

"Profits Would Grow"

"It is startling, but true," the committee said, "that if the 35 cent increase were allowed, most straight oil producing companies would be able to double their profits after taxes. . . .

"The way to avoid a shortage in the future is not to strip our reserves dry by the inducement of higher prices, but to import more from South American countries such as Colombia and Venezuela and thus conserve our own resources. . . .

"We urge the Office of Price Administration to set its face against the demand for a 35 cents a barrel increase in oil prices. We shall likewise urge the director of economic stabilization to reject all pressure that may be brought to relax the price ceiling."

Slemp Buried On Knoll Near Site Of His Birthplace

Big Stone Gap, Va., Aug. 10 (AP). On a knoll overlooking the site of his birth, C. Bascom Slemp, 72-year-old former Republican National Committeeman and leader of the GOP for 30 years in Virginia until he retired in 1932, was buried today in Turkey Cove, Lee County, with a simple Methodist service.

Slemp, the former Representative from Virginia's "Fighting Ninth" District and presidential secretary under Calvin Coolidge, died Saturday in Knoxville, Tenn.

Many friends and admirers of Mr. Slemp attended the funeral services held at the Methodist Church here. Among the many floral tributes sent was one from former Presidential Candidate Wendell Willkie.

Hundreds of persons who were unable to get into the little church stood on the sidewalk and heard by loudspeaker the services which were conducted by the Rev. S. C. Beard, pastor of the church.

Shenandoah Berry Crop Smallest in Years

Waynesboro, Va., Aug. 10.—The berry crop in this section of the Shenandoah Valley has been the smallest in years, according to mountain pickers who annually peddle their fruit here. Prospects were for an excellent crop, as the set of fruit was heavy last spring. However, prolonged dry weather just at ripening time has caused both huckleberries and blackberries in mountain areas to dry up without ripening. The few berries being picked are those found near streams or in hollows where soil is deep.

YESTERDAY'S ANSWER.

2271 Women Got D. C. Jobs

Of the 3410 persons in the District of Columbia who found jobs through the United States Employment Service during July, 2271 were women, it was announced yesterday by K. Vernon Banta, director.

Service industries with 2112, or 60 per cent of the total, absorbed the majcrity of workers. Unskilled labor jobs were furnished to 589 workers.

Ten per cent of the workers placed were in commercial and professional classifications, according to Banta.

Orders were received by the USES office for typists, stenographers, automobile mechanics, laborers in machine shops and industrial plants, radio station engineers, bookkeeping and calculating machine operators, truck helpers, jumpers, and all types of hotel and restaurant workers.

"Many other places in various other classifications are open to workers registered at the USES office at 501 K st.," Banta said.

All persons who could work should immediately get into essential jobs, Banta declared. If it is found that a man, woman, girl or boy needs to take a training course to prepare for a war job, it can be arranged through the USES office.

Two hundred and five more women were placed during July than the previous month, and in the manufacturing industry 53 per cent more jobs were filled by women, Banta explained.

I'm proud of my legs . . . and want them to look their best. Even Grandad admits it was Gram's ankles that first attracted his attention. So I'm just as fussy about choosing hosiery as I am about any of my clothes. Yes . . . suntan is becoming, but when I want to look my best I wear a pair of shimmering Phoenix rayons. Why, I have a complete wardrobe of them . . . extra sheer for important occasions . . . sturdier grades for the office. Somehow it sets me up to know I'm well dressed . . . and a girl can't be really well dressed unless she wears stockings . . . now honestly . . . can she?
